Road Steps Up Life in a Berlin Suburb

By ELLEN LENZ
Special to The New York Times

WEST BERLIN, July 24 — For Editha Fischer and her neighbors, life has changed drastically in the four years since the tiny community of Steinstücken was put on the map as an integral part of West Berlin.

"There is no comparison," the 67-year-old Mrs. Fischer said, gesturing toward the Communist-built border wall just beyond her garden plot. "In the old days we lived in fear of losing our lives or liberty. Now we worry about trees and about traffic getting too heavy."

In the "old days," Steinstückeners never worried about traffic. Very few cars came to the suburb. Since World War II, the 200 residents of the Western enclave inside East Germany have had a precarious existence under constant threat of Communist encroachment.

Steinstücken, although legally part of West Berlin's American sector, was isolated from the city by an intervening strip of East German territory. Access to the 31-acre community was possible only over a deserted country road, with East German Army checkpoints controlling traffic at either end. Communist guards kept out all but permanent residents and visitors who had special permits.

Officials like West Berlin policemen could not enter by land, but the United States Army determined to maintain the Western outpost, stationed military police at Steinstücken, bringing the soldiers across by helicopter.

All this changed when the Western Allies and the Russians, in their Berlin pact of 1971, agreed that the life of the people in the detached area be eased by an exchange of territory.

The West Germans subsequently bought a corridor-like strip of land from the East Germans, three-quarters of a mile long and 30 yards wide, that links Steinstücken and the West Berlin suburb of Wannsee.

In August 1972 the Americans and the West Germans celebrated the inauguration of the new Steinstücken highway. While the new land route reduced the isolation of the area, it also brought a change of pace into life there.

A Raceway for Motorbikes

On a warm afternoon a visitor driving to Steinstücken was pursued by three youths on motorcycles who clattered past in a cloud of blue fumes. The cyclists, in black leather jackets and crash helmets, disappeared into Steinstücken's only restaurant, the Dovecote.

"Sometimes there are up to 40 of these young riders at the bar," said Johannes Niemeyer, who is in his 80's. "They picked our new highway as a private race track."

Only recently, he said, had it become a bit more quiet, after a crash in which two youths were killed. Like the hamlet, the highway is demarcated by East German border fortifications, including stretches of concrete wall about 12 feet high.

The Palestinian guerrilla organization and the right-wing Christian Phalangist Party were reported yesterday to have reached a new cease-fire agreement covering all Lebanon, effective at 8 A.M. today. Representatives of the two groups signed the agreement Friday night in the presence of Dr. Hassan el-Kholi, the Arab League's special envoy in Beirut. This was the 32d cease-fire order in the last 16th months and there was skepticism that the Phalangists could persuade the militants among allies to go along with it. Two rightist factions, the National Liberal Party of Interior Minister Camille Chamoun and the Guards of the Cedars, insist on occupying the besieged Palestinian camp of Tel Zaatar or disarming it before fighting is stopped. Palestinian sources confirmed the cease-fire agreement, but said that approval of the allies in the leftist Moslem alliance was essential before the cease-fire could become effective. National

The Labor Department and the Department of Justice have agreed to begin a major investigation of the internal management and financial affairs of the Hotel and Restaurant Employee's and Bartenders' International Union. The union, the nation's 14th largest, has close ties to the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. A major concern of the joint investigation, which is to begin Sept. 1, is whether Federal laws were violated in the union's doubling of expenditures and an increase of more than 400 percent in the top-level salaries since a change of leadership in 1973. Close ties between top union officials and Sidney R. Korshak, a prominent Los Angeles labor lawyer, who is believed to be linked with organized crime, will also be examined. [1:5-8.]

The Federal Bureau of Investigation joined the California authorities in a nationwide hunt for two of three suspects in last week's kidnapping of 26 school children and their bus driver near Chowchilla in central California. One of the three men, Richard A. Schoenfeld, 22 years old, surrendered Friday. The search was under way for Fred Newhall Woods 3d, 24, and James L. Schoenfeld, also 24, and brother of Richard Schoenfeld. The judge who signed the arrest warrants for the three men also sealed for 10 days "certain confidential information" provided by law enforcement officials that reportedly establishes that the three were involved in kidnapping. CORRECTION

An article in The New York Times July 11 on a Foreign Policy Association survey of Americans said 58 percent of those responding opposed a formal United States alliance with Israel in return for Israel giving up occupied Arab territories and accepting an independent Palestinian state. However, the article failed to report that those polled favored—45 to 36 percent—guarantees, other than an alliance, from the United States and its NATO allies to Israel for relinquishing the territories and accepting a Palestinian state. The same article gave incorrect figures on those favoring diplomatic relations with Peking. The correct figures are 63 percent for and 18 percent against.

Africans Hail Start of New Zealand Matches

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

WELLINGTON, July 24—The eyes of many of the country's 4.5 million whites. The widespread apprehension that the four-game tour could prove to be the last between South Africa and its traditional sports rival has made interest in it, down to the most trivial details, almost a patriotic obligation.

A business executive in a Johannesburg suburb interrupted a dinner party last weekend for his son to read solemnly down the newly announced list of players in the South African Springbok team.

Later in the evening, the dinner guests were dismissive as they watched the opening of the Olympics, televised from Montreal. "An emasculated performance," grunted the host, to general approval.

Few are unaware that the New Zealanders are here by a quirk of politics, and could easily join the rugby boycott imposed by Britain and Australia, South Africa's other traditional rivals, before the next series, scheduled in 1978.

After the last All-Black tour here, in 1970, a labor government was voted into power in Wellington. It banned sports with South Africa. But the ban lapsed when a national party Government came into power.

Some people here, including a number senior officials, feel that the change of policy in New Zealand could be emulated elsewhere. Such people perceive a shift among Western nations that they hope, will lead to an end of the boycotts that have precluded South African participation at the international level in most of the sports that are popular here.

Those who hold this view have been encouraged by the widespread criticism in Western countries of the walkout in Montreal. "The black states are helping us by demonstrating the stupidity of mixing politics and sports," said one sportsman. "When our old friends in Britain and Australia have time to mull it all over, who knows but they may decide to play us after all."

Others believe that the boycott movement is likely to stiffen unless South Africa removes all racial barriers in sport as part of a general abandonment of apartheid. So far, the Government has made only cautious modest moves toward what it calls "multi-racial sport," and has showed no willingness to compromise on the essentials of apartheid.

ROUNDUP IN UGANDA: Photo just received here from a Kenyan news agency is said to show Uganda soldiers making arrests after the Israeli raid on Entebbe Airport on July 3. Amin Halts Supply Of Power to Kenya, Threatens Attack

NAIROBI, Kenya, July 24 (UPI)—President Idi Amin of Uganda today cut electricity supplies to Kenya and threatened to attack it unless the Kenyans lifted their economic blockade and allowed petroleum supplies through.

"If the blockade continues Uganda will have no alternative but to fight for her own survival," President Amin said in a broadcast.

He said the army had been "very angry over the indecision of the Uganda Government in not attacking Kenya after the Israeli raid on Entebbe Airport and the blockade."

He accused Kenya of having stopped 600 oil tank trucks, most of them bound for Uganda. He said that despite Kenya's claims to the contrary, Uganda had already paid for the petroleum supplies in the trucks.

The Uganda Radio said electricity from the giant Owens Falls power station — which supplies one-third of Kenya as well as Uganda—would be "liable to interruption" because there was not enough oil in the country to service the turbines.

Uganda also suspended all international flights by foreign carriers effective Sunday because of a shortage of aviation fuel.

The official Kenya news agency charged that Uganda was halting the services in apparent retaliation for its own troubles in obtaining petroleum supplies via Kenya.

Kenya's Foreign Minister, Muryau Waiyaki said Ugandans "were cutting off their nose to spite their face" by ordering the electricity cuts and Kenyan officials assured their people that the country had sufficient reserve electricity supplies.

Kenya's British Newswoman NAIROBI, July 24 (Reuters)—Kenya today ordered James Fox of The Sunday Times of London to leave the country, airport officials here said.

The British journalist, who has been in Kenya for two weeks, was escorted from his hotel room to the airport by the plainclothes police officers.

Rhodesians Are Using Foreign Soldiers

JOHANNESBURG, July 24 (AP)—The Rhodesian Government has reportedly begun an international recruiting drive for foreigners to join the Rhodesian Army to fight black nationalist guerrillas. The white minority Government says that the recruits are not mercenaries but immigrants who get the same pay as Rhodesians.

The influx of foreigners coincides with departures by some of Rhodesia's own whites in the face of increasing warfare with blacks intent on bringing down the Government of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith.

The recruiting has brought in veterans of Vietnam, the Malaysian antiguerrilla campaign and the Portuguese colonial wars in Mozambique and Angola.

The Rhodesian Government officially denies that it seeks mercenaries for the armed forces, but correspondents who visit the operational areas, where security forces are battling black guerrillas, often find Americans, Britons, South Africans, Germans, Greeks and Portuguese who have only recently arrived in the country.

Advertisements have been placed in South African and British newspapers and American magazines asking for former soldiers interested in "a service career in the sun," according to the Johannesburg newspaper The Daily Rand.

Replies are to be addressed to Post Office Box 44262 in the Salisbury suburb of Linden, the paper said.

Maj. Nick Lamprucht, the chief army recruiting officer, who, the paper says, screens the would-be recruits, has dismissed as "hogwash" British television reports that Rhodesia operates an international recruiting network.

But Defense Minister Pieter Van der Byl has said that foreigners are welcome to join the Rhodesian Army if they are prepared to accept the wages—about $80 a week—and the terms.

"Applications from suitably qualified men are considered for our regular forces at normal rates of pay," a Salisbury Government spokesman said.

Applicants are carefully screened. Barry Lundrum, a former Chicago policeman, has been in Salisbury five months awaiting approval from the recruiting office.

The exodus of white civilians from Rhodesia increased sharply since guerrillas stepped up offensives in the first half of this year.

According to official figures, Rhodesia had a net loss of 2,280 whites in the first half of this year, compared with a net gain of 1,590 whites in the first six months of 1975.

LEBANESE INFLUX ANNOYS LIBERIANS

Government Is Taking Action to Limit the Refugees

MONROVIA, Liberia, July 24 (Reuters)—A civil war thousands of miles away in Lebanon has brought growing numbers of refugees to Liberia, prompting complaints from unemployed Liberians and action by the Government to limit the influx.

There has traditionally been a substantial Lebanese community in this West African country of one and a half million people.

Official figures for 1975 showed 33 Lebanese here granted residence permits, 961 had their permits renewed and 159 were given re-entry permits. But officials say there has been a considerable increase this year.

Many of the Lebanese have established themselves as shopkeepers and traders. As their relatives arrive from their ravaged homeland, jobs are found for them in shops and offices.

The result, from the Liberian viewpoint, is another obstacle to the Government policy of "Liberianization," or placing more on the country's citizens in jobs previously held by foreigners.

The Justice Ministry has told immigration officials that any aliens arriving without visas, especially Lebanese, are to be put back on the planes that brought them and sent back to their country of origin.

The Liberian Embassy in Lebanon has been closed and its staff evacuated during the fighting in Beirut.

The immigration chief, James Bull, said that there had been a considerable increase in the number of Lebanese entering the country, though statistics were not immediately available for this year.

Poor Go to Liberia

A Liberian watching Lebanese disembark from an airliner at this capital's airport complained that the poor Lebanese came to Liberia, "while the rich Lebanese go to Italy, Cyprus and other European countries."

The Acting Justice Minister, Astrada Barnard, said when asked to comment on the public reaction that the ministry was aware that the situation was affecting social problems and unemployment.

He said that Liberia had liberal laws on immigration, but that when the social, economic and political situations were adversely affected and Liberianization hindered, restrictions had to be imposed.

Mr. Barnard said that the Government sympathized with the refugees in view of the strife in Lebanon, but he added: "We also have a responsibility to our citizens and to safeguard our interests."

The increased influx of Lebanese followed a greater flow of Asians here from East African countries. These migrants, mostly Indian and Pakistani holders of British passports, began arriving in large numbers particularly after President Idi Amin expelled them from Uganda in 1972.

A British Newsman Disappears on Trip To Ethiopian Front

LONDON, July 24 (Reuters)

—Jon Swain, foreign correspondent of The Sunday Times of London and Britain's Journalist of the year in 1975, has been missing in Ethiopia for more than a month, his newspaper announced in its issue tonight.

The paper said that the 28-year-old Mr. Swain disappeared while on an assignment to witness the progress of a peasant army mobilized by the Ethiopian Government against guerrillas in the northern province of Eritrea.

The only clue to his whereabouts, the newspaper said, is a report by the police in the tiny northern town of Axum that Mr. Swain checked out of a hotel there on June 15.

The Sunday Times said the British Consul in Addis Ababa tried to fly to Axum early last week to make inquiries but was unable to reach the town, which is close to the Eritrean border where the peasant army was camped.

The Ethiopian Government explained later that "the security situation in Axum was too dangerous to allow the consul to continue," the newspaper said.

Mr. Swain won his 1975 British press award for his reporting of the takeover in Cambodia by Communist-led forces. He was passenger on the last plane into the Cambodian capital, Phnom Penh, before it fell and made his way out of the country after two weeks with other foreigners in the French Embassy there.

According to the Sunday Times, Mr. Swain arrived in Addis Ababa on June 7. The next day, he sent a cablegram to his London office from the main post office. That was the last time the paper heard from him.

According to Ethiopian Airline's passenger lists, on June 11 Mr. Swain flew 350 miles north to Makale, capital of Tigre Province, which borders Eritrea. The next day, June 12, he is listed as having flown a further 70 miles northwest to Axum, close to the Eritrean border where the peasant army was camped.

EGYPT SPURRING EGG PRODUCTION

Government Has Set a Goal to Raise Daily Output to 400,000 by 1978

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times

CAIRO, July 20—The Egyptian Government is pushing plans to enlarge the poultry industry, spruce up the Suez Canal and carry out other development projects despite the country's burden of debts, now unofficially estimated at $10 billion or more.

To help finance development, Egyptian officials hope for more aid from the oil-producing Arab states.

At a recent meeting here, representatives of Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar and Saudi Arabia initiated an agreement setting up a $2 billion fund for economic development in Egypt. What it is to be spent for has not been announced. Further negotiations are to be held with Egyptian officials.

The Egyptian Information Minister, Gamal el Oteify, announced last week that the Government had worked out a plan to increase the relatively small egg production of state-owned chicken farms from the present daily level of 170,000 to 200,000 by October. The Government is also aiming at doubling this by 1978.

Privately owned egg production last year was at the rate of 4.13 million a day. The Government hopes that a substantial increase in this total could be achieved with help from Western investors.

Protein Lack a Problem

Poultry production, and the supply of protein-rich foods in general, has for years been a matter of concern to Egyptian governments—as it has been in other eastern Mediterranean countries, where the diet has been based too heavily on cereals, seasonal vegetables and sugar.

This concern has been deepened by continued population growth. Though Egypt has not had a census for 15 years, the growth rate is thought to be 2.2 to 2.6 percent a year and the population is estimated at more than 38 million.

Even 20 years ago, not long after the overthrow of Egypt's last monarch, King Farouk, the Government moved into the egg business. A model incubating center was set up at an estate near Cairo that had been expropriated from kinsmen of the King. Selected varieties of poultry were sent out from the estate, and from local distribution centers, to agricultural cooperatives.

Over the years efforts to enhance the poultry industry have been undercut by such problems as a high rate of mortality among chicks distributed by the Government and fraud in the sale of poultry feed.

Plans Held Optimistic

In announcing its new expansion plans, the Government is showing the perennial optimism that has led to a certain amount of head-shaking in the international economic community over its long-range, large-scale economic planning.

Though details of the Government's five-year plan for 1976-80 have not yet been announced, it is expected to include 20 percent increase in agricultural production and an 30 percent increase in industrial production over the period as well as an annual increase in the gross national product of 7 percent or more.

The convertible-currency costs of the additions to Egypt's economic base and industrial capacity that are envisaged under the plan are expected to run at least $20 billion, with much of the money coming from the oil states.

Now that the Euphoria caused by the boom in oil revenues has subsided, Arab officials have become somewhat reluctant to pour their money into Egypt.

A much-needed $500 billion in revenue is expected to come in this year in tolls charged to vessels passing through the Suez Canal, which was closed from the outbreak of the 1967 Middle East war until last year, and work has begun on an improvement program that will enable larger vessels to use the waterway.

9 South African Animals Are Considered Endangered

PRETORIA, South Africa, July 24 (AP)—The leopard, the cheetah and at least seven other South African animals are considered endangered species, conservation officials say.

D. S. du Plessis, director of nature conservation in the Transvaal, said to a University of Pretoria audience this week that other endangered animals included the brown hyena, oribi, or pygmy antelope, roan antelope, sable antelope, tsessebe antelope, reedbuck and pangolin, a type of anteater.

Mr. du Plessis said that birds on the danger list were the wattled crane, which he described as "probably the rarest bird in the Transvaal," the crowned crane and the bald ibis.

All the talk about man-tailoring underwhelmed us.

Until we met Bill Haire

Man-tailored this. Man-tailored that. We've been hearing about it for months. "Why should a woman be more like a man?" we asked each other. "Who wants to look as if she were auditioning for 'Notorious Woman'?"

But, as you can see from our drawings, mocko-macho is not what designer Bill Haire has in mind. All the dashing haberdashery he creates has a softened and gentled and very female feeling.

The result: a new sporty sophistication that's sleek but never strict. Little details do it. Flip-back cuffs. Flip-bowed shirts. A curved line where it counts. Soft, all-climate fabrics, because you go climate-hopping more than you used to. (For instance, these creamy wool and nylon flannels Mr. Haire traveled to Italy to pick for you.)

These two outfits are a sampling of the smooth collection Bill Haire has done for Friedricks. Everything is in a new, liquid-deep shade of brown that he calls rum-and-coke. Our longer, slimmer tunic is 100.00. The slender trouser skirt is 76.00.

In our smaller sketch, the mini-checked blazer is 144.00. Glen plaid pleated trousers, 84.00. Plaid vest 68.00. All these in Bill's Italian flannel. The plaid shirt (shown twice) is beige and brown polyester crepe de chine at 48.00. All for sizes 6 through 14.

Now you know that this is one-designer who understands your go-a-lot, do-a-lot life style. And you'll discover something else when you meet Bill Haire. (Haire tomorrow, 12:30 till 2, with models.) He likes you.

He thinks you're smart. ("Brilliant" is really what he told us.) "Today's woman" says Bill, "understands. I only make suggestions. She knows how to put the pieces together to please herself and stretch her wardrobe."

So here's your Master Plan for tomorrow, smart one. Study Bill Haire's ideas in our Fifth Avenue windows. Then come on up to Studio III on three, meet Bill Haire and collect some compliments in person. You deserve them.

FIRE ON QE2 HALTS NEW YORK VOYAGE

Explosion Off English Coast
Wrecks Engine Room

LONDON, July 24 (AP)—Her engine room a shambles and her funnel blistered by fire, the British ocean liner Queen Elizabeth 2 slowly sailed up the English Channel today after a fire halted a voyage to New York.

The 66,851-ton Cunard Lines luxury ship, the only British liner still making the trans-Atlantic run, was heading for her home port of Southampton tonight. Cunard Lines was arranging to fly most of the 1,200 passengers, including about 780 Americans, to New York tomorrow or Monday.

Cunard engineers were waiting to assess the damage to the ship's starboard turbine engine and determine the cause of the fire. The blaze started about 5 A.M. yesterday, when the ship was 80 miles west of the Scilly Islands off England's southwestern tip, and burned for 50 minutes.

An engine room mechanic, Kenneth P. Lyon, 20 years old, was the only person reported injured. Capt. Mortimer Hehir told passengers that Mr. Lyon was in "very serious" condition last night.

Preceded By Explosion

An American passenger, James Yuenger of Chicago, said in a ship-to-shore telephone interview that the fire had been preceded by an explosion. He said that most of the passengers were sleeping and were not aware anything was wrong until breakfast yesterday morning.

A London newspaper quoted a steward, Robin Pecw, as having said: "There was a heavy explosion in the starboard engine generator. The funnel's superstructure was blistered by 60-foot-high flames."

A Cunard official said there was no indication that the fire was anything but an accident.

A cache of explosives was found aboard the QE-2 last year, and the police said then that the liner had been used to run guns and ammunition into Northern Ireland for the Irish Republic Army.

Officials said they hoped that the engine damage would be repaired by Aug. 3, the QE-2's next scheduled date for sailing to New York.

Jewish Congress Organizes a Drive Against Air Piracy

The American Jewish Congress has started a campaign to mobilize broad public support for immediate anti-hijacking legislation action by the Federal Government to try to bring an end to air piracy.

In an advertisement published in today's issue of The New York Times, the organization also called upon the international civil aviation community to initiate protective measures.

The statement said:

"Legislation is needed that will direct the President to suspend air service to (1) any country used as a base of operations or training or as a sanctuary for terrorists; (2) any country that arms, aids or abets terrorist organizations, and (3) any country that continues to maintain air traffic with an offending state.

"At the same time legislation is needed that will curtail all U.S. economic and military assistance to any nation that encourages, protects, supplies—or fails to take appropriate action against organizations guilty of air terrorism."

Cites Israeli Action

The organization's statement said that it was vital to protect lives in such incidents as the recent hijacking by guerrillas of an Air France plane. Israeli forces invaded a Uganda airport to rescue 103 hostages, most of them Israeli citizens.

The statement also said: "The private civil aviation community must agree collectively to seal off from air traffic any country whose actions make it an accomplice in the crime of hijacking."

The International Air Transport Association and the International Federation of Airline Pilots Association were requested "to make clear that they no longer will fly to any nation that (1) refused immediately to return a hijacked plane, its passengers or crew; (2) gives haven to those responsible for any hijacking, or (3) fails to prosecute or extradite hijack terrorists promptly."

Richard Cohen, associate executive director of the American Jewish Congress, said:

"We hope to win support of Christian groups, labor, black groups, veteran organizations, the American airline industry and all other groups that share with us a revulsion against such terrorism and a frustration over the fact that nothing really has been done about this practice."

The advertisement contained a coupon seeking donations to support the campaign.

U.S. Citizen Freed by Belgrade Again Denies Charge of Spying

THORNTON, Colo., July 24 (UPI)—Laszlo Toth, flanked by the wife and daughter he had not seen in nearly a year, today denied the industrial spying charges that had led to his imprisonment in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Toth, an American Citizen, said he would expand on his denial and relate his experiences in prison at another news conference, to be held at his suburban condominium.

About 25 people, including several persons from the great Western Sugar Co. of Colorado, his employer, greeted him last night at the Stapleton International Airport with cheers and signs as he stepped from his plane with a representative of the United States State Department. He had flown from Belgrade to New York, and then to Denver.

Laszlo Toth as he arrived in Denver yesterday.

"The Yugoslavs knew I was innocent and even the district judge who convicted me to seven years in prison knew damn well I was innocent," Mr. Toth said. "If the United States Government didn't apply all the pressure it could, I would have been there seven years."

Mr. Toth did not appear to be upset by the revocation of Yugoslav citizenship and expulsion from his native country. "I am learning a new feeling," he said. "You know, it's like being born again."

Mr. Toth, with his wife, Zora, and daughter, Vera, had returned to the country of his birth last summer for a vacation. He was arrested while visiting the sugar refinery in his hometown of Vrbas, where he used to work before immigrating to Colorado.

The Yugoslav Government accused him of having taken 800 photographs at the refinery and convicted him of industrial spying.

(AP) — Looking for a woman married at least her bride immigrants to sticky in woman, in- Moroccans, Cypriots, Indians and Egyptians. They said that the men had been contacted by marriage brokers who arranged the ceremonies for $630 each, including $180 for the bride. Bride and groom met only once, just before the civil wedding, and parted with a handshake after signing the book. Now the "husbands" find that they are illegally married, still illegally in Britain and subject to deportation. Most came to this country without papers in search of jobs and permanent residence. Scotland Yard said that the woman is in her 40's and used aliases and false addresses for her marriages at London's registry offices and in surrounding towns. An extradition detective spotted the fraud while checking applications to the Home Office from women applying for residence rights for their husbands. Handwriting experts confirmed that several had been written by the same person. Las Vegas Hospital

Offering Discounts
To Attract Patients

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Casino hotels here offer discounts to lure visitors on slow weekdays, but a hospital is doing just the opposite by giving weekend discounts to lure patients. An advertisement shows a friendly looking stork wearing wire-rim glasses. "Just Like a Bundle From Heaven," reads the text. Since Jan. 18, Sunrise Hospital Medical Center has been offering a weekend special. Patients checking in between midnight Thursday and midnight Saturday get a 5.25 percent rebate on their bill. In the first five months of the program, Sunrise gave 2,200 patients, not medical insurers, $190,000 in rebates. The average rebate to weekend patients is $90, a spokesman said. David Brandsness, the hospital administrator, said the purpose was to increase the census in the 436-bed hospital on the weekends when the patient count is down. "I was sitting here one morning," he said. "Our weekend census was below 300 and I knew that by Tuesday night we were going to be turning patients away." His thoughts then turned to Las Vegas hotels, which offer the weekday specials to fill their rooms when the tourist count is down from weekend peaks. Mr. Brandsness decided to turn the whole thing around. Hospital records show the weekend patient count up 30 to 50 percent since the price special was started. "We have some real positive reaction from patients," Mr. Brandsness said. "I haven't had one come by and say it is a lousy idea."

Dentists Found Successful
If They Become Physicians

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dentists who want to become physicians have pretty good chances of making the transition successfully, according to a survey. A sampling of 194 physicians who were once dentists or dental students indicates many did very well in medical school and distinguished themselves in their careers, says a study in The Journal of Medical Education. The report's authors say medical schools should re-examine the frequent practice of denying admission to applicants with dental training. They also say "that the fact that one already has a dental degree in dental training makes it more, rather than less likely that these physicians will make substantial contributions" to medicine and dentistry. The study was conducted by Dr. Donald Sadowsky of the division of dentistry at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City; Dr. Anthony Picozzi of Farleigh Dickinson University School of Dentistry; and Dr. Enid A. Neidle of the New York University College of Dentistry. GIVE PLEASURE GIVE FRESH AIR FUND

Thailand Town Faces a Sterner Life Without G.I.'s

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN

UDON, Thailand, July 22—At the little noodle stand where she works near here, Amnuy Nongparcot ponders a grim future.

The stand is just outside the gate at Ramasun until recently the United States' largest overseas electronic listening station.

Four thousand Americans worked there, operating sophisticated equipment that eavesdropped on Indochina and southern China.

The facility was officially closed June 20 when, at the request of the Bangkok Government, the United States was ending its 28-year military presence in Thailand. Now the Americans are gone.

Plans That Went Awry

Two years ago Mrs. Amnuy earned $100 a month, more than twice the going rate in Bangkok, as a housekeeper on the American installation. She had expected to go to the United States to marry an American she had met here, but when she realized that he would not send for her, she married a Thai who worked at the Ramasun bowling alley and made $130 a month.

They had two children and, on that salary, lived well. But suddenly it all ended. Now Mrs. Amnuy tends the noodle stand outside the Ramasun gate, where a visitor found a few Thai soldiers, there to guard the facility, lounging in the midafternoon heat. The stand grosses about $10 a day; its operator takes home less than $20 a month.

Her husband drives a car for hire, but there's rarely anyone to hire it. Most of the time it is parked at home. It's not worth the gas to take it out.

The noodle stand reflects what has happened to Udon and to many of the provincial base areas of Thailand since the American pullout began.

noodles and glasses of iced tea is Men, who is 10 years old. Others, children, five and six years old, played on the pavement around the stand. Some had blue eyes, one had freckles. Next week Men will move with her mother to Bangkok.

"They should not move away from here," Mrs. Amnuy said. "Here everyone understands. In Bangkok, in school, she will be a freak, an oddity. But one must live."

The rows of shops across from the main gates at Ramasun and Udon air base 10 miles to the north—formerly a major U.S. station—are testimonials to this need for survival. The signs, "Gents' Tailors," "Pizza Parlor," "Sid's Drugstore," are still up, but the shops are shuttered. Their owners have moved on, most them to Bangkok. There have been a few insurance fires, as their owners sought to recover their investment, according to local government officials.

Exodus of Prostitutes

Prostitutes, bar girls and other various hangers-on of the old life style have also left, for Bangkok's notorious Patpong Road and the southern Thai beach resort of Pattaya. They will not be missed. But the thousand or more American-trained Thai technicians will be missed. Many have left for Singapore, where their skills are in demand.

"We hope to use that big air base to set up a regional aircraft repair facility, perhaps attract the Thai-Air Corporation up here to do that," said Udon Province's Deputy Governor, Saisith Fornsawe. "It would take up some of the unemployed here. There are many," he said.

Udon, the center of Thailand's fourth largest province, has always been a bustling commercial center. Its population of more than 750,000 was swelled by 150,000 Americans at Ramasun and another 6,000 at Udon Air Force Base.

Commercial life here is still bustling, but the economy as a whole is strained by a sudden surge of nearly 2,000 newly

Bulgarians Unearth A Thracian Chariot

SOFIA, Bulgaria, July 24 (UPI)—Bulgarian archeologists have unearthed a four-wheeled chariot that belonged to a nobleman of ancient Thrace, and the skeletons of four horses nearby, according to the official press agency.

Micho Kunchev, the head of the excavation in southern Bulgaria, dated the finds to the second half of the 1st century A.D. They were discovered near three Thracian tombs at the site of a settlement called Karanovo. The tombs are from a later period.

The chariot was poorly adorned but near the skeletons of two horses the archeologists found numerous bronze decorations for the bride, copper artifacts, 72 glass beads and parts of the bridle with bronze buttons and plates.

unemployed since the beginning of this year. It costs the Government about $100,000 to feed, clothe and house the jobless.

Now, the worst drought in a decade has settled over north-eastern Thailand. This year's rice crop may be 20 to 30 percent below normal.

No Bitterness Toward U.S.

Yet the American pullout has not embittered the people of Udon toward Americans. On the whole, leftist elements and those who support scattered bands of insurgent Communists have been having a matchless time of it in the past year. There has been a political swing to the right, even away from non-Communist leftists.

During the national election campaign this spring Governor Saisith brought Luotian's refugees down from the camp at Nonk Khat to speak at Udon. Apparently the message got through. Of nine seats at stake in Parliament, only one went to a Socialist candidate.

Closer to the Laotian border hatred and distrust of the Communists are more intense. In the village of Tha Bo, on the Mekong River about 10 miles south of Vientiane, Sagwasak Sirichana, who owns a rice mill and trading company, ran for parliament on the ticket of the ultra-right, Chart Thai Party. He easily defeated the liberal, reformist organization with no Communist connections.

3 CUBANS SEIZED WITH A PIPE BOMB

had been passed on to the police and had prompted the stake-out.

"These forms of terrorism have never prevented us from showing solidarity with Cuba and opposition to the United States Government blockade against Cuba," said the committee spokesman, Isabelle Johnston. "Tonight's show will go on despite terrorism."

The 3,000-seat movie theater was sold out for the evening performance of "In Concert With Cuba," a musical and dance program that has become an annual commemoration of the revolution that brought Fidel Castro to power in 1959. July 28 is a reference to the date of the attack of Castro's guerrillas on the army barracks in Santiago de Cuba in 1953, initiating the revolutionary fight.

The three men seized outside the theater were described by the police as Cuban aliens living in New Jersey and followers of an anti-Castro group known as Omega 7.

That group has claimed responsibility for the June 6 bombing of the Cuban mission to the United Nations, and a similar bombing of the Venezuelan mission on Feb. 1, 1975. The suspects were identified as George Gomez, 28 years old, and Alfredo Chumaceiro, 22, both of Union City, and Armando Santana, 25, of West New York. All were charged with attempted arson, reckless endangerment, possession of a dangerous weapon and possession of a stolen car.

According to the police, the suspects drove up to the theater in a stolen car with New Jersey license plates and parked at the curb. One was said to have remained at the wheel while the two others got out with the bomb and a loaded .38-caliber automatic pistol.

Concealed nearby in doorways and cars were four members of the police stake-out team—Officers Eli Velasquez and Edwin Martinez of the intelligence division and Officer Richard Rosario and Sgt. Frank Randise of the arson-explosion squad.

The suspects were said to have planted the bomb against the theater box office and to have been on the point of igniting it when the officers moved in and arrested them without a struggle.

The bomb, which was taken away after the arrests in the Police Department's special bomb-removal truck, was described as an eight-inch length of pipe containing more than a pound of "high order" explosive powder and rigged with blasting caps and a fuse.

The bomb did not have a timing device and was apparently meant to be detonated at the time it was planted. Police bomb experts said the four-inch fuse could not have been snuffed out had it once been lighted, and would have set off the bomb in 10 to 15 seconds, evidently with considerable power.

Capt. Albert J. Sulzer, who was coordinating the investigation, said the bomb had "tremendous potential" for injury and destruction. Another police spokesman said: "It would have blown out the whole front of the theater."

While suspects have been seized from time to time with smoke bombs or other non-lethal devices, the police said no one had been arrested in the act of planting a live bomb in New York in more than five years.

On May 16, 1970, a Puerto Rican nationalist, Carlos Feliciano, was arrested by police officers who said they saw him place a loaf of bread containing a bomb in the doorway of an Army recruiting station at 163d Street and Southern Boulevard in the Bronx. Mr. Feliciano was subsequently acquitted of charges in connection with the incident.

Industry Urged to Offer Exercise Plan to Employees

CHICAGO, July 24 (UPI)—An official of the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports says that "two of the most serious occupational health hazards are the desk and swivel chair."

Richard O. Keelor, council director of program development, urged business, industry and public agencies Wednesday to provide their employees with opportunities for regular exercise as a form of preventive medicine.

He said that the desk and swivel chair "deprive working men and women of opportunities for needed exercise." He testified before a hearing on health care costs by the Council on Wage and Price Stability, part of the executive office of the President.

UPSTATE UTILITY PICKS PLANT SITES

Power Pool report that 24 new generating stations would have to be built in the next 15 years to meet the projected load growth in the state.

At present there are four operating nuclear plants in the state, one shut down for repairs, one completed but not yet operational, two under construction, and four for which applications have been made to appropriate state and Federal agencies.

Town Shocked by News

The news of its selection as a possible nuclear site came as a surprise and a shock to this rural area of 1,665 persons in the mid-Hudson Valley, which already is involved in a controversy about a different proposed atomic power plant.

About 20 miles downriver on the other side of the Hudson in Greene County, the State Power Authority has filed an application to build a 1.2-million kilowatt nuclear power plant. Many local residents have objected on the ground that its safety has not been demonstrated to their satisfaction.

That same objection was voiced to the new proposal by Robert LaBrie, supervisor of Stuyvesant.

"I am strongly opposed to it," he said. "The main reason is that the experts can't agree on the safety factors of a nuclear plant."

Study Is Under Way

Robert E. Lyons, whose dairy farm of 255 acres is within the area under consideration, said that he learned about the site selection at 8 o'clock the other morning when representatives from the company approached him to sign a waiver permitting it to do some test borings.

"I was shocked at the news," he said, explaining that he and his family came to the area six years ago with the intention of staying on. "We don't want to move."

Mr. LaBrie and some other residents made their comments on the basis of their conclusion that the new plant would be an atomic one, even though the company said in its announcement and subsequent explanations that no choice had been made.

The utility said that Ebasco Services Inc. of New York City had been engaged to determine which form of energy—coal, uranium or another—was best suited for producing electricity in the late 1980's in upstate New York. The study is not expected to be completed until the end of the year.

Meanwhile, at a time when there are increasing indications that nuclear power is not maintaining its position as the cheapest fuel for power plants, the Public Service Commission in Albany has also undertaken a study of the relative costs of coal versus nuclear power plants.

In its announcement the utility said that it had selected the two final sites after studying 340 possible ones throughout the state. From them, 100 possible sites were evaluated further, dropping down to 20 preferred sites and then the two finalists.

At the end of the detailed studies by geologists, weather specialists, biologists, water-quality experts, demographers, sociologists and economists, one of the sites will be designated as the preferred location and the other as the alternative. At that time, the utility will file applications with the Public Service Commission for permission to build the plant.

HURRICANE UNIT FEARS LATE STORMS

MIAMI July 24 (AP)—Although there has not been a hint of tropical storm activity since the hurricane season began June 1, forecasters at the National Hurricane Center have warned that "some of the worst hurricane years have turned out to be late starters."

The Atlantic hurricane season officially ends Nov. 30, but forecasters say few storms occur after Oct. 15.

At this time last year, there had been five tropical depressions—when winds reach 25 miles an hour.

Such systems are named and upgraded to tropical storms when winds exceed 39 miles an hour and are called hurricanes when winds exceed 74 miles an hour. There had been two tropical storms, one of which developed into a hurricane, at this time last year.

There has not even been a tropical depression so far this year, the forecasters said.

Misuse of Funds Charged

TRENTON, July 23 (AP)—An audit of a Trenton education program shows the city misused $471,560 in Federal funds from 1971 to 1973, according to the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The 49-page report said the program, Project Build, had been designed "to develop exemplary programs which showed the promise of reducing the number of children who do not complete their education in elementary and secondary schools."

NEW YORK AWAITS GRANTS FROM U.S.

City Will Get $75.9 Million From Public Works Act, Plus Job Projects

By MOLLY IVINS

Cash-starved New York City is due for a tidy windfall from the Federal Public Works Act, enacted Thursday over President Ford's veto, but has yet to decide exactly how to use the money.

According to the formula used by the Senate Government Operations Committee, the city will get around $75.9 million in a direct grant under the provisions of the bill aimed at maintaining basic services such as police and fire protection. City officials would say little yesterday about their plans for the money, but union officials said they hoped it would be used to avoid further layoffs.

In addition, the Public Works Act will provide millions of dollars for job-creating capital improvements projects. The state as a whole is entitled to up to $250 million for construction projects that can be started within 90 days of the time the money is received.

City officials said it was impossible to predict how much of those funds would come to the city, but New York suffers from no shortage of capital projects that can be started up or picked up in a hurry.

"A substantial number of our projects would be eligible," said First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti. "A lot of projects got stuck in the pipeline during the fiscal crisis—schools and sewers, and much more."

"We would almost have to hold a drawing because so many projects have not gone forward," Mr. Zuccotti said. "We are trying to set priorities on them now. The Budget Bureau is reviewing the universe."

Title II of the public works measure consists of so-called countercyclical grants to states and communities with high unemployment to enable them to maintain municipal services, such as fire and police protection and garbage collection. This direct-grant aid is like revenue-sharing money, and Mr. Zuccotti said it would be used to help with the city's fiscal situation.

New York State will get $190 million of the "countercyclical" money, which, according to Representative Bella S. Abzug, Democrat of Manhattan and a member of the House Public Works Committee, should save about 18,000 government jobs.

John Viani, head of research for the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said:

"We're asking for a meeting with city officials to determine the impact of this money on public service jobs. It will certainly help with the fiscal crisis, and we are hoping that some portion of it will be used for rehiring and even more important, to prevent further layoffs. We still have batches of layoffs coming down every week, they are continuing, and we just don't know to what extent this can be allocated for rehiring."

Appropriation Needed

Although both the House and the Senate overrode President Ford's veto of the public works bill this week, the Congress still has to actually appropriate the $4 billion called for by the act. The span between Congressional authorization and appropriation can stretch out, but Representative Abzug said she hoped Congress would appropriate the funds before its August recess.

"The Public Works Committee is holding an emergency meeting with the Appropriations Committee Monday," she said, "and we'll push for action because of the second recess."

The countercyclical funds will go directly to the cities, but the Federal Economic Development Administration will screen applications for grants for public works projects.

E.D.A. is formulating its guidelines and procedures," said John Eden, Acting Assistant Secretary of Commerce. "The bill calls for having the guidelines ready within 30 days of the authorization, and we will publish them on Aug. 23.

These applications will be considered on a project-by-project basis. The act says the E.D.A. will take into consideration the rate of unemployment and how rapidly a project can get under construction."

Representative Abzug, like other New York politicians, is full of ideas on how to spend the money. She suggests that the completion of the Third Water Tunnel for New York, a project that has been stalled for lack of funds, would be a good possibility.

The tunnel would provide water for Nassau and Suffolk Counties, and according to Representative Abzug, would provide jobs for 8,000 sand hogs, electrical workers, iron workers, laborers and operating engineers. She would also like to see the city go forward with long-standing plans for renovation of the West Side 72d Street subway station.

In the division of "countercyclical" funds, according to the formula in the bill, Nassau County would receive $2.69 million and Westchester would get $1.396 million. The State of New Jersey would get $39.5 million in countercyclical money and is eligible for up to $250 million of the public works money.

H.E.W. Opening Rule-Making Procedure to Public From Start

By NANCY HICKS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 24—In a move to quell a growing public controversy over Federal regulations, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare is changing its procedures for writing those rules, Secretary F. David Mathews announced today.

The change, which takes effect immediately, gives interested public groups and individuals the opportunity to express their opinions on issues before drafts of important and controversial regulations are written, rather than after they have been published, as is now the case.

The new approach also requires the 1,000 or so agency employees who write rules to take special English classes to help make regulations more easily understood.

In a statement, Mr. Mathews said: "Under the previous system, when the need for a regulation arose, the department consulted largely with the groups having a special interest in a given program and then proposed a regulation which often reflected their common preconceptions. The public at large was shut out of the process."

Anti-Washington Target

"Effective today, H.E.W. will open the process by framing the issues for the public and laying out available options. Once these are on the table, we will work to stimulate the widest possible public discussions."

"We will not put forward a major proposal until the people affected by it have had their day," said Mr. Mathews, who placed regulation reform on the top of his priority list when he joined the agency 11 months ago.

In a growing atmosphere of anti-Washington sentiment in this election year, the Federal regulation-writing process has been a constant target.

Regulations are the rules that Federal agencies develop to implement laws passed by Congress. As antidiscrimination laws, social programs and regulatory agencies increase, the number of regulations that directly affect large numbers of people also grows.

Businesses, hospitals and universities—prime targets of regulations—complain that the rules are too cumbersome to comply with—that simpler methods could bring results if only there were some opportunity to make suggestions before rules were written.

Congress, too, has complained about regulations, charging that the agencies often "rewrite" laws in regulations. As a result, there are some regulations—all education rules for example—that must be revised by Congress before they are official. The executive branch is challenging the constitutionality of this provision, however.

Congress and interest groups complain about the delay in the issuing of regulations that sometimes prevents programs from being implemented as legislated.

The new procedure does not address that problem directly, but Mr. Mathews said in an interview that he expected the new approach would help somewhat.

Often those delays arise from an inability of experts within a department to come to agreement on controversial points, he said. Agreement at the draft stage would be as crucial under the new approach, he said.

Opportunity for Suggestions

From now on, when H.E.W. has to issue an important regulation, it will begin by publishing in the Federal Register and elsewhere a notice of intent to publish, which gives interested parties an opportunity to make suggestions on the issue within the 45-day period allotted.

After a review of the comments, the department will issue a draft of the regulation, which may also be reviewed for 45 days.

In this draft, the department will state its preference for action.

After comments on the draft are reviewed, and weighed against department opinions, the law and other factors, the final regulation will be issued. If, however, the final version differs substantially from the draft, it will be published again for public comment.

In each step, the department will list the name, title, address and telephone number of the person who can answer ques-

Is Lukewarm to Discussions About a Beame Re-election Campaign

It is clear that the top aides of Mayor John Lindsay are not as enthusiastic as they once were about a Beame re-election campaign next year, sources close to both men report that their relations— which, not surprisingly, were strained during the height of the state fiscal rescue of the city—have improved considerably.

Mutual friends say that there is genuine affection between the two. Neither is a grandstander trying to grab the spotlight at the expense of the other. Finally, both realize, their friends say, that they will both lose if they begin feuding publicly, as Nelson A. Rockefeller and John V. Lindsay did before them.

The Mayor backed up these assessments when, in an unusual move, he publicly thanked Mr. Carey for his aid to the city, at a breakfast meeting of New York Democrats. "He's taken a lot of flack for us," said the Mayor. That's unusual praise by one politician for another.

New York Republican politicians are predicting that Vice President Rockefeller and his principal New York political operative, Richard M. Rosenbaum, the state G.O.P. chairman, will attempt to depose the Brooklyn Republican chairman, George L. Clark Jr., in the not so distant future.

In a party where conformity is a cardinal rule, the outspoken 35-year-old Mr. Clark is a rarity. He is leading the Ronald Reagan drive for delegates in this state, although it is apparent that he is getting little help from the national Reagan organization.

There is some interesting political psychology behind the use of the phrase "Jim Buckley, The Senator" on the Conservative-Republican Senator's campaign buttons and literature.

Midwest Farmers Apprehensive on Ford Grain Policy

By SEITH S. KING
Special to The New York Times

SYLVIA, Kans., July 24—One of the largest winter wheat crops ever grown in the leading wheat state was safely in the elevators today and Kansas farmers were plowing under dark gold stubble, preparing to plant another large crop this autumn.

In the Corn Belt areas to the east, farmers were anxiously watching for rain as one of the largest corn crops ever planted enters the delicate pollination stage.

But despite these indications of abundance, combined with reasonably good market prices, many normally Republican farmers in the Middle West are apprehensive about the weather and distrustful of the Ford Administration.

And most were reconciled to making less money this year, even though there were no assurances that if their income dropped consumer food prices would follow suit.

Problems for G.O.P.

These factors added up to problems for the Republicans in the farm areas. The fall election is a political commandment in the Middle West that most farmers vote Republican when they are happy and Democratic when they are restless.

With the prospects of a total winter and spring wheat crop of 2.040 billion bushels, the second largest the United States has produced, Great Plains wheat farmers must look to another year of unusually large exports or the prices they get, already sliding down toward the break-even level, will plummet.

Farmers who grow corn and soybeans, the feeds on which cattle, pork and poultry production depends, are equally dependent on exports and have an added worry about the weather, in a year when weather patterns have been abnormal in many sections.

As of July 1, the Agriculture Department was predicting that a record 6.5-billion-bushel corn crop would be harvested this fall if normal weather prevails.

Exports Cut Reserves

But even though last year's 5.7-billion-bushel crop also set a record, recent exports to drought-plagued Western Europe and to the Soviet Union have brought reserves from last year's crop to their lowest point in 28 years.

If rain does not fall over the Middle West in the next three weeks, 1976 yields will be slashed. Prices for corn and soybeans would rise; livestock producers would start reducing their flocks and herds, and pressure would build for consumers for another embargo.

Earl Hayes on his farm near Sylvia, Kan. "We were promised free markets by the administration and twice we didn't get 'em, and we're still mad as hell about it," Mr. Hayes declared.

on exports to hold down feed grain prices.

Should President Ford, who has twice imposed grain embargoes in the last two years, do so again, most farm leaders believe he and the Republicans would be doomed politically among the farmers.

Earl Hayes, a wheat farmer, said "There has never been a time in our history when we've had so much wheat in the United States, and if we don't export two-thirds of it, the price we get for it will be a disaster."

"We were promised free markets by the Administration and twice we didn't get 'em, and we're still mad about it," declared Mr. Hayes, who has spent most of his adult life growing wheat near this central Kansas village and in other parts of the state.

Near-Normal Crop

Despite an unusually dry growing season, Mr. Hayes has just cut a near-normal wheat crop from the 800 acres that were undamaged by the weather.

Mr. Hayes, who is serving this year as president of the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, said that wheat prices were declining as the huge crop came in and he was getting about $3.20 a bushel this week at local elevators, a price he said was getting too close to non-profit levels.

"Last year, until the embargo last fall, we were getting up to $4 at the elevator," he said.

"If we'd been able to sell off more wheat last fall when the Russians wanted it, the carry-over would be smaller and our prices now would be fairer today."

Mr. Hayes, a stocky man with twinkling blue eyes, pointed his finger at his visitor and declared:

"That embargo was a political thing from the word go. It was nothing but to depress prices. There was plenty of wheat then and there is now."

"Hopefully, there's going to be a market for all this wheat," Mr. Hayes added. "But how can the farmers be sure that they'll be allowed to sell freely to everybody?"

Woes of Cattle Feeders

Wheat farmers may be facing lower profits, but the situation is more serious for cattle feeders in the Middle West. They are caught between unexpectedly high feed prices and, to them, disastrously low market prices for their beef as the drought in some areas forces ranchers to cut their herds by sending more cattle to market.

"There's a lot of disappointment among cattlemen, to put it mildly," Royal Holz, one of the largest cattle feeders in central Iowa, said today.

"When you're losing $50 or more on each animal you fatten, you're bound to be apprehensive," he said.

Mr. Holz said he did not believe the Ford Administration was being blamed directly for this situation but that livestock raisers were unhappy about their prospects.

Mr. Holz was recently chosen as an alternate Iowa delegate to the Republican national convention next month. He supports Ronald Reagan.

"There's been some easing off in antagonism toward Ford around here," he said. "But a lot of farmers are for Reagan and would trust him more than they would the Democrats, if he's nominated."

Outlook on Cattle Prices

"Low stockyard prices for fattened cattle will probably continue through the summer," Mr. Holz said, but turned upward in the fall as fewer fattened animals are marketed.

This would bring higher retail beef prices just before the November elections, another factor that would not benefit incumbent Republicans with voters.

"You still hear farmers around here discussing the grain embargoes, but I honestly think corn and livestock producers aren't quite as mad as they were last year," said David Williams, who raises corn and soybeans as well as hogs and cattle on his farm near Villisca in western Iowa.

Mr. Williams said his corn crop looked very good now, but there had been no appreciable rain in his area since June 20 and most of the subsoil moisture was gone.

"We need rain badly or we're going to get badly hurt," he said. "A reduced crop would push our prices up, if we had something left to sell. A big crop like we're looking at now would bring prices down some unless the exports are allowed to go on. What we need from Washington, whoever is in, is a more definite food policy, and I don't see that coming right now."

Most farmers concede that neither Republican candidate, nor the Democratic farm plank, offers guarantees of unrestricted markets.

The Democrats say they support free and expanding farm markets but would "prevent irresponsible and inflationary sales" to foreign purchasers.

Mr. Reagan has said that he would not hesitate to use food sales as a weapon in dealing with the Communists. And President Ford, while championing farm exports, has twice stopped them when they threatened to push grain prices too high.

Mr. Hayes, who stressed that his growers association was nonpolitical, declined to say how he thought wheat farmers would vote in November.

"But Kansas farmers ought to be able to add two and two and get four," he said. "I'm sure they're intelligent enough to figure things out for themselves this fall."

Efforts to Clean Up Great Lakes Gain, but New Problems Emerge

By GLADWIN HILL
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, July 24—The nation's ecological problem children, the Great Lakes, are benefiting from an international cleanup campaign. But they are manifesting new and perplexing pollution troubles as fast as old ones can be resolved.

Where once the lakes' main problem was thought to be urban and industrial sewage, two other challenges have recently emerged: toxic chemicals and atmospheric fallout.

These were among the major findings reported this week in the annual assessment of the International Joint Commission, the United States-Canadian body that is the principal watchdog agency on the lakes' condition.

A commission was established in 1911 to deal with border problems, but didn't really come to grips with the accelerating degradation of the lakes until 1972, when the two nations signed a pact providing for joint corrective action.

The five lakes are the world's largest reservoir of fresh water, and the international boundary bisects four of them—Superior, Erie, Huron and Ontario. Lake Michigan is entirely in the United States.

A Dying Lake

Lake Erie, the worst off, was described by some experts as a "dying" lake, because of pollution from the millions of people and thousands of industries in the Erie basin, had begun to paralyze its natural regenerative processes. Parts of the lake were devoid of oxygen, and sewage had propagated a perennial, massive crop of foul-smelling seaweed. Signs of incipient deterioration were observed in the other lakes.

More than 90 percent of the pollution in the Great Lakes was attributed to the United States. What was chiefly needed in the view of the experts was a large-scale program to build fluid-waste treatment plants for both municipalities and industry. The 1972 treaty called for cleanup measures to be "completed or in the process of implementation by Dec. 31, 1975."

The International Joint Commission's Great Lakes Water Quality Board reported to a commission meeting at Windsor, Ontario, on Wednesday that "progress towards attainment of the goals established by the 1972 agreement has been made, but it is generally slow, uneven, and in certain cases disappointing." A sizable portion of the work, the board said, was not likely to be completed before the early 1980's.

An inspection trip by Russell E. Train, administrator of the United States

Environmental Protection Agency and other United States and Canadian officials, confirmed that in the Detroit area, long a major source of Great Lakes pollution, conditions were greatly improved over a few years ago.

Rivers Cleaned Up

The once-brown Detroit River, a major tributary of Lake Erie, is greenish again, and game fish have returned. One of the river's important tributaries, the Rouge River, which is a waste outlet for dozens of industrial plants, ranging from auto factories to oil refineries, is still dum-coloured, but no longer is the oil-covered sewer it once was, daily carrying thousands of tons of noxious chemicals toward the lake.

The Wayne County sewage treatment plant outside Detroit has introduced an intensive oxygenation process that removes nearly all the phosphates from community waste. Phosphates, a component of the principal nutrients of algae, are the cause of the algal bloom at Niagara Falls, N.Y., where industrial and municipal wastes sluice into the Niagara River, a huge $60 million plant, one of the largest and most advanced in the world is about six months from completion.

But the international water quality board found little to cheer about in the general condition of Lake Erie.

"Phosphorus loadings to Lake Erie from major urban centers are three times greater than in 1975 targets, the panel reported. "Cladophora [algae] and other aquatic plants are still a problem in the lower lakes [Erie and Ontario] and may worsen unless programs for readily controllable sources are accelerated."

The oxygenated area of the lake, the board added, was "greatly reduced" in 1975 observations. But it said, this was attributed to excessively calm and warm weather conditions that had caused abnormal layering of the water, and "the reduced situation is not being taken as a definite indication of improvement."

The United States, according to the Environmental Protection Agency, has spent more than $4 billion on improved sewage treatment projects in the Great Lakes basin. But the corrective program was depicted as delayed by projects which are not scheduled to be completed until as late as 1981 in eight cities—Detroit, Duluth, Minn.; Gary, Ind.; Cleveland and Euclid, Ohio, and Tonawanda, Buffalo and Syracuse, N.Y.

Recently some scientists have suggested that as much as half of the Great Lakes pollution may come from the sky—particles of phosphorus, heavy metals, pesticides and toxic industrial compounds that get into the air and then come down in rain, snow or just as dust.

A report to an American Chemical Society meeting in Evanston, Ill., last month by Joseph J. Delfino, associate professor of water chemistry at the University of Wisconsin, conjectured that such contaminants "are carried along with dust as much as 200 to 300 miles."

The water quality board reported observations that in some degree seemed consistent with this theory. It said that there was "extensive contamination" in commercial and sport fishing areas by toxic compounds.

Appearance of Pesticide
The most mysterious has been the appearance of mirex, an insecticide used in the Southern United States to kill fire ants, but unfamiliar to the Great Lakes region.

"The chief concern for Lake Ontario," the board reported, "is the bio-accumulation of toxic contaminants such as polychlorinated biphenyls [a polycyclic industrial compound, known as PCB's, has been a problem in the Hudson River] and mirex in fish and wildlife."

"Mercury contamination of fish is a problem in the western basin of Lake Erie. In Lakes Huron and Michigan, PCB's in fish are a major concern."

"In Lake Superior, items of concern include accumulations of PCB's and mercury in fish and high concentrations of asbestiform fibers in the water."

"Lake Ontario in 1975 revealed almost a total reproductive failure of some herring gull colonies, in contrast to the reported near-normal reproductive success in other Great Lakes colonies.

The eggs of Lake Ontario gulls contain some of the highest organochlorine [pesticide and industrial compound] burdens reported in any biological system.

"The adult gulls were found to contain 15 organochlorine compounds and 14 polynuclear aromatic hydrocarbon compounds (e. g., PCB's and DDT and its metabolites) in their tissues. The concentrations of mirex approached concentrations of DDT."

chance of eventually succeeding. The immigration service believes the illegal migrants may be discouraged from making a second, third or fourth attempt once they are back in their home regions far from the border.

W. E. Bagge, deputy Border Patrol chief at San Ysidro, opposite Tijuana, where the illegal border crossings have become a surging flood, estimated that about half of the 600 or more aliens seized in the sector each night come from deep inside Mexico.

At the insistence of the Mexican Government, which reluctantly agreed to the new airlift after rejecting a similar proposal in April, those returned to the Mexican interior must volunteer for the repatriation.

If they object, they are taken back across the border in the usual manner with what Mr. Bagge said was a 70 percent change they would try to enter the United States again.

Those deported in the first four days of the airlift, known as Project Interior Repatriation, were sent to Mexico City. Other flights may go to Guadalajara.

Seizures in a Week
The goal of 15,000 to 17,000 air repatriations in the program's experimental phase ending Sept. 30 will be only a tiny fraction of the illegal aliens apprehended in that period along the 2,000-mile border from Tijuana on the Pacific to Matamoros on the Gulf of Mexico.

In the Tijuana-San Ysidro sector alone, about 4,000 illegal aliens are seized each week, and 8,000 to 10,000 others are seized in the border regions of Arizona, New Mexico and Texas.

In addition, 40,000 to 60,000 a week are believed by the immigration authorities to make it safely across the border to swell the officially estimated eight million illegal Mexican aliens already in this country.

In the airlift, the Government is repatriating only Mexican males 18 or older.

It has assured the Mexican Government that those being deported in the airlift will receive "all meals, beverages and other normal passenger services" and will not be required to pay any part of their air fare even if they have money.

The immigration service is turning over the repatriated aliens to Mexican consular officials before their departure for questioning to establish that they are in fact Mexican nationals.

The American Government also has guaranteed that the deported Mexicans will receive all wages owed them in the United States before they are sent home.

As in other departure cities, Mexican Consul Alberto Juarez in San Diego said the repatriates were being questioned closely after which they are issued "presumption of nationality" certificates to allow them to embark in Mexico City.

Rodolfo Vallodolid, chief of Mexican immigration in Tijuana, said that a steadily growing number of the illegal aliens classified by the American authorities as Mexicans were actually Central Americans.

Clark Asks U.S. to Aid Transit; Senate Hopetuls Have Busy Day

By THOMAS P. RONAN

Ramsley Clark yesterday called for a national transportation policy "fulfilling the basic human need for fast, safe, efficient, comfortable and inexpensive travel."

The former United States Attorney General, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for United States Senator, charged that the country lagged far behind other nations in public land transportation.

"Unlike every other industrially developed country," Mr. Clark said, "we rely on millions of private cars and trucks for our transport requirements." Mr. Clark's comments were contained in a 10-page position paper on transportation needs.

"We are plagued by air pollution, traffic jams and automobile accidents," he said, "while in cities and suburbs, in small towns and rural communities, rail and bus lines stand abandoned or deteriorating."

U.S. Aid Sought

Mr. Clark suggested that Congress propose a major commitment of Federal funds to mass transportation. He said that in the New York City area the aid should be used to reduce the subway fare and to upgrade the Long Island Rail Road and reduce its fares.

Campaign headquarters for Paul O'Dwyer, the City Council President, announced that former Justice Owen McGovern of State Supreme Court had formed a committee of lawyers to back Mr. O'Dwyer's bid for the Democratic nomination for the Senate seat held by James L. Buckley, Conservative-Republican.

Among the lawyers on the committee are W. Bernard Richland, the city's Corporation Counsel; Herman L. Weisman, former president of the Zionist Organization of America; Jose Cabranes, a law professor at Yale University and a former representative of Puerto Rico in Washington, and Borough President Percy E. Sutton of Manhattan.

Representative Bella S. Abzug, another candidate for the nomination, marked her 56th birthday yesterday by campaigning in Queens and attending three fund-raising parties on Fire Island. John F. English, the former Nassau County Democratic chairman, was the host at one of the parties.

Daniel P. Moynihan, former United States representative at the United Nations, campaigned upstate and attended fund-raising parties in Westchester County in his quest for the Democratic nomination for the Senate.

Mr. Buckley was endorsed by the National Alliance of Senior Citizens. Mrs. J. W. Aubrey, the president of the organization, said his fiscal responsibility in government had helped protect those living on fixed incomes from the deep ravages of inflation.

Offshore Oil Acres Picked

WASHINGTON, July 23 (AP)—The Interior Department announced today the selection of more than one million offshore acres in the Gulf of Mexico for the Democratic nomination for environmental study in preparation for petroleum leasing. The department said a sale of leases was tentatively planned for April 1977.

WEST POINT FACES NEW DIFFICULTIES

Esprit of Accused Cadets Is Fresh Factor in Lingering Cheating Controversy

By JAMES FERON
Special to The New York Times

WEST POINT, N.Y., July 24—With the number of West Point cadets officially accused of cheating approaching 200 and likely to go higher, the United States Academy is facing some unexpected morale and administrative problems.

One of the more surprising effects of the continuing dispute, according to Army lawyers who supported the accused cadets at an unusual news conference yesterday, was a recent decision by those charged to resist feeling disgraced.

Cadets charged with violating the honor code are customarily separated from their classmates. Those accused of being involved in the current cheating scandal are spending the summer in a provisional detachment known as "the penal colony."

Recently, one of them said, they decided to organize themselves—"the way West Point taught us," another of them said—by seeking knowledgeable counsel and by improving their appearance and their attitude.

An Army lawyer said: "They noticed they were not getting haircuts, because nobody cared. They were accepting the prisoner mentality. They decided then to be the best-groomed, best-dressed guys on the post. If the idea was to yell on a reveille run, they would yell louder than anyone."

This apparently improved esprit was indicated yesterday at the news conference by the scores of accused seniors who filled the room with cheers and applause for the half-dozen among them who chose to charge the Academy publicly with unjust prosecution.

They were represented by Michael T. Rose, an Air Force Academy graduate and former military lawyer who is an expert on academy honor codes. He has organized the West Point lawyers into research teams.

The cadets, who have formed their own internal chain of command, and Mr. Rose were supported by Army lawyers such as Arthur Lincoln, who said later, "I used to feel that honor code violators should be heaved out, but not anymore, not in this case anyway with the way the Academy is trying to railroad them out of here through selective prosecution."

West Point's management problem will become more serious as the summer continues. "We have teaching obligations," Captain Lincoln said, "and the Academy, in attempting to complete prosecutions by the end of August, has been trying to speed things up by getting cadets to incriminate themselves, for example, or by restricting lawyers from the initial review panels."

An extra 52 lawyers were assigned to West Point several weeks ago and 50 more are on call. With new names being added every week, however, there is considerable doubt that prosecution will be concluded by Labor Day.

Forty-eight cadets were originally charged with comparing answers last March on a take-home project in electrical engineering. Complaints that West Point was hiding the true scope of the prohibited collaboration led to a reexamination, and the number rose to 160. Of the 182 implicated so far, seven have resigned and only 58 have gone before officer boards, with guilty verdicts sustained in 40 cases.

But at least one professor and two prosecutors have joined the cadets and several Army defense lawyers in saying that there were actually 300 to 600 cadets involved. The superintendent, Lieut. Gen. Sidney Berry, has rejected allegations of a cover-up, saying that new names were being investigated as they appeared in testimony.

Academy officials are attempting to persuade Army officials in Washington, meanwhile, to relieve their administrative burden by waiving the active-service requirement facing any junior or senior expelled for an honor violation.

The academy initially attempted to persuade Secretary of the Army Martin R. Hoffmann that it was the cadets themselves who sought this relief by having the Army lawyers sign a petition that would have read as follows:

"We the undersigned attorneys at the United States Military Academy feel that if the two-year enlisted services incurred by cadets who resign during their third and fourth years were waived by the Secretary, there would be a resignation of between 50 and 80 percent of those cadets presently pending appearance before the boards of officers. This opinion is based on our own observation and talks with those cadets presently charged."

In fact, more than 95 percent of the 100 on-campus cadets polled last week by one lawyer indicated a desire to stay on at the Academy. The proposed petition had infuriated the attorneys, especially the last sentence, indicating it was the cadets themselves who sought relief, and none of them would sign it. Since then the Academy has made the same proposal on its own.

GAMING CONTROL BY STATES URGED

Panel Favors New Federal Law to Effectuate Plan

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 24—A Government commission has recommended that the states be given the power to determine what forms of gambling may take place within their borders.

In its second interim report, the Commission on the Review of the National Policy Toward Gambling proposed the "enactment of a Federal statute specifically empowering the states to regulate gambling." It said it had found "no overriding national reason" for Congress to prohibit or encourage gambling in the United States.

In line with its general proposal, the commission specifically recommended that the states "be permitted individually to levy whatever taxes they consider proper on legal gambling concerns." Such taxes, it said, "should preclude the imposition of Federal taxation," including income, excise and occupational stamp taxes.

The commission found that "the income tax statutes relating to gambling have proven ineffective, as a revenue-producing measure, as a deterrent to illegal gambling, and as directed against organized crime."

It also found that "the efforts of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Department of Justice with respect to either a diminution in the volume of illegal gambling or an impact on organized crime have been singularly unsuccessful."

The commission urged that "the primary authority for gambling enforcement be transferred to state law enforcement agencies."

The belief underlying the group's recommendations was that state governments reflect their constituents' needs and desires more accurately than does the Federal Government, "which is further removed from the people" and which, therefore, should not "substitute its judgment for that of the states."

The general proposal to increase the role of the states in gambling administration would codify what is already "de facto policy," the commission said, but with the advantage of "removing doubt about the scope of state jurisdiction."

Acknowledging that some of its specific proposals might be "highly controversial," the commission expressed its hope that public reaction to the interim report would help determine its final recommendations, which will be sent to the President and Congress in October.

The 15-member commission, composed of four senators, four representatives and seven public members, has been studying the national policy toward gambling since January 1974.

JUSTICE DEPT. SAID TO CALL REPORTERS

WASHINGTON, July 22 (AP)—Benjamin Bradlee, executive editor of the Washington Post said Friday that the Justice Department was trying to interview two Post reporters, Rudy Maxa and Marion Clark, who first reported Elizabeth Ray's allegation that Representative Wayne L. Hays put her on his Administration Committee staff as his mistress.

She said that she was paid $14,000 a year. "We are resisting," Mr. Bradlee said. "We don't think reporters should testify, and their [Justice Department] guidelines don't require us to."

Attorney General Edward H. Levi refused to answer any questions about the Justice Department's investigation into Miss Ray's allegations. The Department and a Federal grand jury are trying to determine whether public funds were misused.

Christopher Little, an attorney for The Post, refused to talk specifically about the Hays matter, but said that the newspaper had a general policy against letting its reporters testify about articles.

"We think there are serious First Amendment problems with reporters stepping out of their role as reporters and testifying," he said. "They can't reveal confidential sources; they absolutely can't."

29 Dogs and Cats Are Killed By Poison in Upstate Area

FREDONIA, N.Y., July 23 (UPI)—The state police are investigating the apparent mass killing by poison of 29 dogs and cats in the Chautauqua County farming community of Sheridan.

The police said the dead animals, all pets of families living on Mezzio Road, were discovered Wednesday. In all, 20 dogs and nine cats were killed.

The animals apparently had eaten pieces of a meat-type substance, which was found scattered along the road. Veterinarians in the area said that they thought the substance was laced with strychnine, an odorless, colorless poison.

Residents were concerned with the security of their homes and farms, since most of the dogs had served as watchdogs. "Living in the country without street lights and infrequent police patrols, we counted on the dogs for protection," said Joyce Eggleston, a resident of the area.

Culinary Workers' Union Faces Investigation on Its Financial Activities by Labor and Justice Departments

ing things have happened, among others:

"The salaries of top officers have climbed from a total of $194,412 to $954,446. Mr. Hanley was paid nearly $140,000 in salary and expenses last year.

"The number of international organizers on the union's payroll includes some men with direct ties to organized crime and others who were personal friends and acquaintances of Mr. Hanley from his early days as a Chicago trade unionist in the 1950's.

"The union has sold off more than $12 million in United States Treasury securities and used some of that income to make a series of questionable real estate loans totaling more than $6 million. One of the loans went to Murrieta Hot Springs, a chronically indebted land development project in Southern California that also has received more than $2 million from the teamsters' union's principal pension fund.

"The union spent more than $500,000 to lease two airplanes for the use of its executive in 1975, not including pilot costs. It also spent $22,000 for new office furniture, $26,000 for a Rolls-Royce for a retiring executive, nearly $20,000 for a mobile home, and nearly $30,000 to furnish an apartment for Mr. Hanley in Cincinnati, the union's international headquarters. Mr. Hanley spends most of his time either in Palm Springs, Calif., or in Chicago.

"Under Mr. Hanley, the union has made large political contributions, including $50,000 in direct contributions in 1974 and 1975 to the campaigns of Edmund G. Brown Jr., Governor of California, and $26,500 to John Gilligan, Governor of Ohio, and $25,000 each to Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago and former Mayor Joseph Alioto of San Francisco.

The decision to begin the extensive investigation was made at a meeting 10 days ago between the Labor Department's enforcement division and the organized crime division of the Justice Department.

Officials closely involved in the decision said that the Justice Department, relying in part on a series of reports from its Federal Strike Force in Los Angeles, initially recommended that a grand jury be empaneled, either in Chicago or in Cleveland, to begin hearing testimony about the union's financial transactions.

What one source depicted as a compromise was reached, however, after the Labor Department officials insisted that they be permitted to begin the inquiry with an extensive audit of the union's books in an attempt to determine, among other matters, whether all of the international organizers who had been hired by Mr. Hanley were in fact earning their pay.

Under the agreement, the Justice Department will closely monitor the Labor Department inquiry and immediately initiate grand jury proceedings if there is evidence of illegalities. "We have a case going and Justice wants to get in on it," one Labor Department official said later. He added that the Labor Department did not intend "to treat the Culinary Workers any differently" from other unions whose books were under audit.

"I don't want to rush in yelling 'thief, thief, thief,'" the official said, "when we don't have a single shred of evidence of wrongdoing."

One high-level Justice Department official was more blunt, however, about the Culinary Workers Union, saying in an interview that the department had failed to investigate fully an earlier allegation of specific illegal activity inside the union.

Another senior Justice Department official, noting that some well-known organized crime figures with prior links to corrupt unions had been hired as organizers by the Culinary Workers, caustically said that such men "find each other like flies in the night."

The Justice Department officials noted that the Labor Department's audit of the Culinary Workers was long overdue and, in fact, had been recommended as early as 1974 but never undertaken. In interviews, they cited a number of similarities between the operations today of the Culinary Workers and those of the teamsters' union during its organizing peak under James R. Hoffa in the 1950's and 1960's.

Merging of Locals

Most significantly, the officials said, the Culinary Workers have begun an intensive campaign to merge and centralize various union locals throughout the country, thus giving the union's international headquarters more authority.

union locals are merged "for good and valid purposes," such as to improve the collective bargaining process by presenting a more unified request to management. Nonetheless, he added, "There's a general pattern here that bothers me—even though it doesn't violate the law."

One culinary union merger in San Francisco, involving the consolidation of five local unions, has been challenged by 18 non-union members in a class-action suit filed in Federal court there. The suit accused the international and local Culinary Workers of withholding pertinent data, refusing to give the rank and file a chance to participate in the merger, and using the union's property, and using "coercive" and "unethical" means to force the merger. The case has not gone to trial.

In Los Angeles, according to Federal officials, the culinary union merged a number of locals into one unit and then in what it termed a "constructive trusteeship," installed one of the union's international vice presidents, Mr. Leavitt, as director of the newly merged unit without a vote.

In a telephone interview, Mr. Leavitt said the Government's investigation of the union was "totally unfounded." The emphasis on mergers, he added, was a step that the union "should be applauded for—not criticized."

"We should have done that years ago," he said. "It's ridiculous to have six union locals going to negotiate with one company."

Along with consolidating his control over union locals, as Mr. Hoffa did, Mr. Hanley has employed at least one organizer who also works for the teamsters' union. Union records show that Jackie Presser of Cleveland received $16,590 to organize for the Culinary Workers in 1975, the same year in which he received an additional $160,000 from six other unions, including the Teamsters, for similar work.

The Culinary Workers is directly involved with the teamsters in a controversial financial and jurisdictional alliance known as the Hotel Employees Labor Program (HELP). Under the agreement, which also will be investigated by the Government, the two international unions have agreed to pool funds for membership drives and jurisdictional peace. The Culinary Union had total assets of $18 million as of mid-1975; the teamsters union reported more than $200 million in assets.

Some Justice Department officials and agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation said that they suspected that the two unions might seek to merge formally at some later date.

Merged Pension Fund

Other officials declared that the Government's investigation also would seek to determine whether the Culinary Workers could replace the teamsters' principal pension fund formally called the Central States, Southeast and Southwest Areas Pension Fund, as a key source of easily obtained loans for legitimate real estate ventures involving organized crime elements. The fund is under a separate Labor Department inquiry in Chicago.

The Culinary Workers set up a separate international pension, health and welfare fund at the union's convention two years ago and since then Mr. Hanley has been urging various union locals to merge their pension and welfare programs into it. One labor expert estimated that the various culinary locals now had more than $100 million invested in their separate pension and welfare funds.

Federal agents in California have paid close attention to the make-up of the board of trustees for the newly set up union pension fund. At least four of the trustees are reported to be friends and associates of Mr. Korshak, whose major role as a union "fixer" and intermediary between organized crime and legitimate business was described in a series of four articles last month in The New York Times.

Friends of Korshak

Mr. Korshak's friends on the 16-man board of trustees include Mr. Hanley, the union president; Mr. Leavitt, a vice president; Al Bramsett, president of the union's local in Las Vegas, which staged the strike in March; and Frederic N. Richman, a Beverly Hills attorney who served for years as a junior associate in Mr. Korshak's Chicago law firm.

Police in Los Angeles have reported that Mr. Hanley meets regularly with Mr. Korshak during his visits to Los Angeles; they also have reported that Mr. Korshak is a frequent visitor with Mr. Leavitt.

Asked about those meetings in a telephone interview last week, Mr. Leavitt acknowledged that they took place but described them as purely social.

One well-informed Justice Department official said that the culinary union's attempt to merge and centralize its authority in Los Angeles "makes it easier for a guy like Korshak to use the threat of a big strike to gain more power for himself."

Some of the officials said that the Labor Department's initial inquiry into the culinary union would deal solely with the management of the international union's financial assets and its efforts to consolidate various locals. A later inquiry into the operations of the newly set up pension and health and welfare funds, if warranted, would be handled by a different investigating office inside the department.

All of those activities will be coordinated by Carl H. Reineck, director of the labor management standards and enforcement division.

Group to Buy Area in West For Use as Wildlife Refuge

WASHINGTON, July 24 (UPI)—A private conservation group says that it will purchase 119 square miles of land, much of it wilderness, about halfway between Yellowstone National Park and Glacier National Park to protect its status as a wildlife refuge.

G. Jon Roush, executive vice president of the Nature Conservancy, said Wednesday that the land provided refuge for wildlife, including elk, mountain goat, bighorn sheep, mountain lions, greater sandhill crane and peregrine falcon.

The area in Montana includes more than 15 miles of the Continental Divide.

The purchase was made with $1.45 million from the Interior Department's Land and Water Conservation Fund, matched by $450,000 in state funds and $1 million in funds raised by the Nature Conservancy.

The transfer of the land to the state will be formally made at ceremonies in Helena Monday.

Rose Leads in Poll On National Flower

WASHINGTON, July 24 (UPI)—Most Americans think the rose should be the national flower, according to poll results from across the country.

But Florists' Telegraph Delivery, which is conducting the survey, said this week that the leading write-in candidate was marijuana.

The organization said it was conducting the poll to help Congress decide which flower should officially represent the nation. The issue has largely been dormant since the days of the late Senator Everett M. Dirksen, the Illinois Republican who headed a perennial campaign to designate the Marigold.

The rose, in the poll, has 39 percent, followed by the carnation with 13 percent, the geranium with 10 percent, the dogwood with 7 percent, and apple blossom with 5 percent.

Mondale's Assets Relatively Modest

By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK
Special to The New York Times

MINNEAPOLIS—In national politics, where the accumulation of wealth appears to be easy, Walter Frederick Mondale has not accumulated very much.

An examination of his personal finances and tax returns by The New York Times disclosed that the Minnesota Senator's financial assets are so modest that he is in sharp contrast with his running mate on the Democratic ticket, Jimmy Carter, and most members of the Senate.

In a financial statement published last April and based on 1975 figures, Mr. Mondale estimated his net worth at $77,361. This gives him the lowest net worth of any major party candidate for the Presidency or the Vice Presidency. The figure is about 10 percent of Mr. Carter's worth, which is estimated at more than $700,000.

Moreover, Mr. Mondale is one of the least wealthy members of the Senate, a body that boasts 22 millionaires and in which a majority of the members have assets in excess of $250,000.

Wife Earned $2,500

In 1975, Mr. Mondale and his wife, Joan, reported a family income of $64,475.57, the bulk of which came from his Senate salary, $43,025, and speaking and writing, $15,745. Mrs. Mondale earned $2,500 working with a group of Congressional wives as a guide to Washington and through lectures on art.

Though Mr. Mondale has enjoyed comfortable earnings since he became attorney general in Minnesota in 1960, his financial history is noteworthy because there is an absence of his investment for profit. His records show he owns no stocks, corporate bonds or real estate other than his home. He ended his association with a private law firm in 1960 and has accepted no private legal fees since. He is not a director of any private profit-making organization and has no direct or indirect business interests.

Friends and political associates of Mr. Mondale attribute his unassuming financial attitude to two factors: First, they said in interviews, the Mondales are both children of ministers and put a low priority on the acquisition of material wealth. Second, they said, Mr. Mondale has sought to avoid possible conflicts of interest.

Desire for Excellence

"Fritz Mondale doesn't care about money for money itself," one close Washington associate said. "His ambition is to gain recognition from others for excellence, not for large money holdings."

Justice Harry MacLaughlin of the Minnesota Supreme Court, who was Mr. Mondale's law partner in 1960, said that the Senator gave up a profitable new law practice to take the then $16,000-a-year attorney general's post, but that when Mr. Mondale was in private practice he wanted to "make money at it like anyone else."

Justice MacLaughlin and others also said Mr. Mondale had avoided private financial dealings that would suggest conflict of interest. Mr. Mondale has often told friends that he believes a political figure must avoid not only impropriety but also the appearance of impropriety.

Mr. Mondale, for instance, has ordered his staff not to take anything of value during the Vice-Presidential campaign, including reporters, to pay for their meals.

But Mr. Mondale's associates here and in Washington said this concern for propriety had marked his entire political career.

Justice MacLaughlin said Mr. Mondale once bought a small amount of publicly traded stock of a major corporation, but later sold it because of concern that he might have to vote on issues in the Senate involving the company.

Not Lavish Life

Both here and in Washington, the Mondales have lived comfortably but not lavishly. While he was attorney general they bought a home in the Kenwood section of Minneapolis, an area of large older homes surrounding the Lake of the Isles. The house in the Mary Tyler Moore television program is a few blocks from where the Mondales lived. They sold the home in 1966 for $30,000 to $40,000.

The Mondales live in a similar home and neighborhood, Cleveland Park, in Washington. He valued his home at $75,000 on his 1975 financial statement, which was based on tax figures, but real estate agents estimated that the house was worth $125,000 in Washington's rising market.

The Mondales entertain modestly and have avoided the Georgetown cocktail circuit. They take skiing vacations in Colorado and have made trips to the Virgin Islands.

They have spent handsomely for their children's education. Two youngsters attend Georgetown Day School and Sidwell Friends School, exclusive Washington private schools, and the oldest boy, Teddy, recently graduated from Georgetown Day School. The family's yearly tuition costs when all three children were in school was estimated at $8,000 a year.

Mondale Cites Assurances by Carter That Stage Is Large Enough for Both

By LINDA CHARLTON
Special to The New York Times

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C., July 24—Senator Walter F. Mondale, who is taking his first steps along the campaign trail this weekend, says that he has not talked to Jimmy Carter about "specific Vice-Presidential duties" but that Mr. Carter had assured him he did not mind sharing the stage.

In an interview yesterday aboard his chartered jet on the way to this island resort, Mr. Mondale said he was aware of the frustrations of this office. He had two questions that he had to be satisfied about before he would accept it. The first was if his concept of the Vice-Presidency had a broad range of activities—I wasn't asking to be an alternate President—and the second was if we were sufficiently compatible.

He said he thought it would have been "premature and presumptuous" to have quizzed Mr. Carter on specifics. But he said that Mr. Carter "voiced" his thoughts in the past. Mondale said that most Presidents didn't want to share the stage and that he didn't feel that way.

Harmonious Theme

He said that since the convention he had talked with Mr. Carter "practically every other day" and added, "I believe this is going to be a very good relationship." This harmonious theme has been played almost continuously throughout the two days of talks between the Senator and his staff and Mr. Carter's staff here. Mr. Mondale was scheduled to fly to Plains, Ga., tonight to meet with Mr. Carter.

Mr. Mondale was asked about an apparent contradiction in two accounts of the reason for his early withdrawal from the 1976 Democratic Presidential race.

In his book, "The Accountability of Power," Mr. Mondale wrote that he withdrew in 1974 even though he believed that his campaign was making substantial progress. He stressed the physical and mental stresses of campaigning—calling them "tortures" at one point.

However, at the Democratic National Convention in New York, he indicated that he became in 1974 convinced that as a Presidential contender, he was not the fresh face the voters wanted.

It was, he said yesterday, really a matter of weighing his prospects for success against the certainty that continued campaigning would mean the abandonment of his State responsibilities.

Regarding the rigors of the current campaign, Senator Mondale said "I'm different now. There are only three months to go and the chances are excellent."

Jody Powell, Mr. Carter's press secretary, talked today of the "essential compatibility" between the two men. But there has been one major public deviation by Mr. Mondale from Mr. Carter's stated position. This came in Mr. Mondale's acceptance speech, in which he lashed out at President Ford for pardoning former President Richard M. Nixon for any crimes he may have committed while in office. Mr. Carter has said that he does not intend to make the pardon a campaign issue.

"I am not going to dwell on the pardon in this campaign," Mr. Mondale said. "But that's always troubled me. There was no public accounting even of what had happened."

He said that his acceptance speech was entirely his own and that he had thought it would be "probably the most important speech of my life."

"I didn't clear it with anybody," he said. "It was me talking about what worried me."

Hardly pausing, Mr. Mondale went on to stress what he saw as the closeness of his and Mr. Carter's thinking. "It's interesting," he said, "that we write books separately and many things are identical. We cited their mutual belief in the role of moral leadership in government and the importance of governmental efficiency and responsiveness."

Campaign Plans

This interim period, he said, is a "marvelous chance about two weeks to get our heads together and our campaigns really ready to go."

He said that he planned to campaign "intensively," meaning 18-hour days, and hoped to go into every state. His wife, Joan, will campaign both with him and separately. The three Mondale children, all teenagers, are staying in Washington for the time being to make a campaign in October.

Mr. Mondale's gait mentor, Senator Hub Humphrey of Minnesota, promised to go all out for Mondale. Humphrey will be a great asset.

Senator Mondale said he believed his own strength for the ticket—his ability to attract additional Democratic votes. He went on to "good working relations" with labor and "good ship with labor," and added: "happy, and good relations with the ethnic community have always been and I've always done the Jewish community."

Mr. Mondale seems relaxed and happy, and regrets at taking second on a ticket he once vowed to lead. Of Presidential hopes, cheerfully, "I'm glad I'm glad I stopped."

Carter Sees Talk

PLAINS, Ga., July 24. Mr. Carter, wearing sunglasses, met today with Senator Mondale at the home of Herman E. Talmadge Jr. of Georgia.

Mr. Carter, dressed in a suit and tie, greeted the Senator on the driveway of the home.

"I noticed a pretty fine man in Plains," Senator Mondale said. The Presidential nominee arrived from the airport American. "I never would see that," he said. "I didn't either," Mr. Carter said. "Ordinarily, I sleep in the street for three hours and would have to wake up and go by."

U.S. Election: The Views Abroad

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, July 24—The feeling has spread abroad that "an American election is really a world election, because of the power of the U.S.," as one commentator put it, and so officials around the world are struggling to find out what they can about the Democratic Party's candidate, Jimmy Carter.

There tends to be little attention paid to domestic American politicians who are not involved in foreign policy, so the rest of the world was slow to recognize Mr. Carter's emergence as a Presidential contender.

For all the curiosity about Mr. Carter and the unease that officials instinctively feel about the prospects of having to deal with someone unfamiliar, there seems to be a general conviction that basic United States policy lines are set and are unlikely to be changed very much by a new President, according to reports from correspondents in a dozen countries of Europe and Asia.

Kissinger View Cited

The continuity of American policy was a major theme of a speech by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to the North Atlantic foreign ministers at a meeting in Oslo last May, and the European allies appear to have accepted it as the logical assessment. Speeches by Mr. Carter since then have reinforced this view, despite his attacks on Mr. Kissinger.

In various countries, however, the American political campaign is naturally seen as filtered through local policy aspirations, and judged by what the victor might do in bilateral relations.

In Spain, governments have tended to favor conservative candidates for the American Presidency, who might be expected to overlook Spain's lack of open political institutions. Liberal and leftist opposition members hope for a Democratic President, who they think might put more pressure on Madrid for internal reforms. But they would like to feel more certain about Mr. Carter's intentions than they do now.

In South Korea, despite an official Government statement that "we have no apprehensions about Carter," President Park Chung Hee's supporters speak of the candidate's "lack of perception of the South Korean situation." Reports of a Carter speech in May calling the regime "authoritarian" and calling for pressure on Seoul because of civil rights violations were censored and clipped out of foreign publications distributed there.

Any South Korean can be given a seven-year jail term for criticizing the Government to a foreigner and there was official grumbling when a Carter adviser, Jerome Cohen, visited South Korea in June and spent much time with opposition politicians and the families of jailed dissidents.

In Portugal, on the other hand, the Socialist Prime Minister, Mario Soares, said that he had studied Mr. Carter's statements and found him "in the line of the Democratic Party, the line of Roosevelt and Kennedy."

"Naturally, we Socialists are very satisfied that he is the Democratic candidate for President," he declared.

Officials expressed satisfaction with Mr. Carter's pronouncements on Europe, but concern that he had not spoken clearly on Africa, including the problems of South Africa and Rhodesia, as well as Portugal's former colonies of Angola and Mozambique.

Communists and extreme leftist papers have attacked him, however, as the "capitalist candidate" and the "candidate of the imperialist revival."

Among the major allies, the comments about Mr. Carter tend to reflect puzzlement about the details of his views, which are seen as vague and undefined, and a certain amazement at a political system that could propel a virtual unknown into a Presidential

Ford Is Pressing Drive for Votes To Gain Victory on First Ballot

WASHINGTON, July 24 (AP)—President Ford feels the delegate count is "moving exactly as he expected it to" toward a first-ballot victory at the Republican National Convention next month, his spokesman said today.

His press secretary, Ron Nessen, was asked about an announcement made yesterday by the President's Ford Committee that Mr. Ford had 1,135 delegates, five more than are needed for the nomination.

Mr. Nessen said that the President had expected all along that he would gain the necessary delegates to defeat his challenger, Ronald Reagan, on the first ballot.

Reagan supporters dispute the claim that Mr. Ford has the necessary delegates to win. Mr. Reagan's campaign manager, John P. Sears, has said his candidate had 1,140 votes.

[The latest New York Times tabulation shows the President to be within close range of the 1,130 delegates needed to secure the nomination. The Times tally Friday gave the President 1,124, six short of a majority of the convention. Mr. Reagan had 1,063 and 72 delegates remained uncommitted in the Times Count.]

Mr. Nessen said the President was taking nothing for granted, and would continue to woo the uncommitted delegates and try to change the minds of many committed to or leaning toward Mr. Reagan.

The President has invited the delegates from Maryland and Pennsylvania to visit the White House in the next week.

All 43 Maryland delegates have been invited to meet with Mr. Ford on Monday. Under state law, all 43 are committed to vote for him in early balloting. But about a dozen of them are reported to favor Mr. Reagan.

The 103 Pennsylvania delegates, with several uncommitted, have been invited to visit the White House on Thursday.

There is a possibility that on Friday the President will fly to Mississippi to try to win over the state's 30 delegates, representing the largest single block of uncommitted.

The 60 Mississippi delegates and alternates were to meet in Jackson tomorrow, but plans to seek a preference vote to determine who will receive the 30 delegate votes have been set aside. They may decide to remain uncommitted until the convention, which starts Aug. 16 in Kansas City.

The White House chief of staff, Richard B. Cheney, and one of Mr. Ford's Southern delegate hunters, Harry S. Dent, planned to attend the Jackson caucus tomorrow to assess the mood of the Mississippi delegates.

55% in Gallup Poll Oppose Ford's Nixon Pardon

Nearly two years after the fact, a majority of Americans still believe that President Ford's pardon of former President Richard M. Nixon was wrong, according to the latest Gallup poll.

Fifty-five percent of 1,524 adults questioned said that Mr. Ford did the wrong thing in granting the unconditional pardon, while 35 percent said they thought it was right and 10 percent had no opinion.

The survey indicated that the American public holds the largely same view today as it did just after the Sept. 8, 1974, pardon. At that time a survey indicated that 62 percent of the public opposed the pardon and 31 percent supported it.

Last Tuesday, Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential candidate, termed the pardon "improper or ill-advised." The issue arose at Mr. Carter's first formal news conference after his nomination.

Last Monday, President Ford said at a news conference at the White House that it would be "up to the American people" to decide whether the pardon would be a campaign issue.

The recent Gallup survey indicates that if it does become a campaign issue, it could hurt Mr. Ford if he is the Republican Presidential nominee.

The Republicans in the poll said they supported the pardon by a margin of 35 percent to 31 percent. But Democrats opposed the pardon, 67 to 22 percent.

The independents also favored Mr. Ford, while 37 percent with him and 11 percent undecided.

The survey, taken July 11-14, was based on the following question: "Do you think Mr. Ford was right or wrong in granting the pardon to Richard Nixon?"

Then, in erial that might s one of those ed in a newspaper, and the judge said in effect that the court had an obligation to find out if some- one had disobeyed the gag order.

Both judges said that this obligation by the court to police itself superseded the California shield law, and that in cases such as these, the law simply did not apply.

This means "that when similar cases arise, a court knows that twice the Supreme Court has failed to review cases in which a court was policing itself," said Richard M. Schmidt Jr., general counsel for the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

The argument of the California courts was based on the doctrine of separation of powers. The courts said that be- fore this, the state legisla- ture had no right to tell the court what it could or could not do.

"What the courts are saying is that as a matter of constitu- tional law, state courts can re- fect the shield law; that's what is so scary," said Jack C. Landau of the Reporters Com- mittee for Freedom of the Press. "Separation of powers is so easily applicable to any state shield law that this is a threat- ening development for the press."

There are shield laws in 26 states, according to the Reporters Committee. There is no Federal shield law, although a bill introduced by Representa- tive Robert W. Kastenmeier, Democrat of Wisconsin, is pending before a subcommit- tee of the House of Representa- tives' Judiciary.

The impetus for a Federal shield law arose after the Supreme Court in the case of Branzberg v. Hayes in 1972 rejected a qualified privilege for newsmen and held that re- porters must appear before grand juries and answer ques- tions.

As a result of that decision, three camps of opinion formed. Some people felt that an abso- lute shield law must be passed to protect newsmen in all cases from disclosing their sources of information. Others felt that Congress would never pass such an absolute law, and that a law according a qualified privilege to newsmen was bet- ter than none.

Another Issue Raised
Still others felt that such protection was already inherent in the First Amendment, and that any legislation further defining the issue would weaken that amendment by indicating that it was not strong enough to stand on its own.

The Farr and Fresno Bee cases touch upon another issue that some lawyers and news- men feel may become the next big fight on the First Amend- ment. This involves gag orders placed on defendants, prose- cutors, lawyers and other court personnel prohibiting them from talking with the press.

In recent years, these gag orders have proliferated. Ac- cording to the Reporters Com- mittee for Freedom of the Press, there were two such orders in 1967. By 1974, there were 11; last year there were 18, and there have been six in the first six months of this year.

While the ruling in the Nebraska case made it clear that in general the Court will not tolerate gag orders placed on the press in criminal trials, the law on this other kind of gag order, affecting participants in the trial, is less clear. Some law- yers think that the Supreme Court refused to hear the Farr and Fresno Bee cases because the Court would have had to deal indirectly with the constitu- tionality of this kind of gag order, a question that the Court might well rather deal with in a case where it was the prime issue.

The case that probably dealt most directly with the question was that of Sheppard v. Max- well in 1966, when the Supreme Court ordered a new trial for Dr. Samuel Sheppard 12 years after he was convicted of mur- dering his wife. The Court ruled that newsmen had created such a carnival atmosphere that Dr. Sheppard had not received a fair trial.

In a key sentence, from the majority opinion, which was quoted by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger in the recent Nebraska case, the Court stated: "The courts must take such steps by rule and regulation that will protect their processes from prejudicial outside inter- ferences. Neither prosecutors, counsel for defense, the accused, witnesses, court staff nor en- forcement officers coming under the jurisdiction of the court should be permitted to frustrate its functions."

Lawyers Are Worried
This citation by the Chief Justice in the Nebraska decision has worried a number of law- yers and newsmen who see it as encouraging the kind of gags that are present in the Farr and Fresno Bee cases.

The Farr case began in 1970 when Mr. Farr, then a report- er for The Los Angeles Herald Examiner, was covering the trial of Mr. Manson, who was later convicted of the murder of the actress Sharon Tate and six other persons. Because of the sensational nature of the case, Superior Court Judge Charles H. Older ordered partici- pants in the case, including lawyers, not to talk to the press.

Mr. Farr wrote a story discussing that the members of the Manson "family" had com- piled a list of Los Angeles show business personalities marked for execution. Later, under questioning by Judge Older, Mr. Farr said that his information had come from two of the six attorneys of record in the Man- son case, but he would not say which two.

On July 28, 1971, Mr. Farr was held in contempt by Judge Older for refusing to answer questions about the identity of his sources. He eventually served 46 days of an indefinite jail sentence on the contempt charges. He was freed by Su- preme Court Justice William O. Douglas pending an appeal to the United States Court of Ap- peals for the Ninth Circuit.

That court upheld the lower court's contempt citation, stat- ing that a reporter's privilege to withhold confidential infor- mation had to be judicially weighed against the need for disclosure. Since then, the Farr case has been in and out of state and Federal courts.

The Supreme Court's refusal to review the case sends it back to the Los Angeles Su- preior Court. A hearing is scheduled for Monday on a motion by Mr. Farr that the court suspend the sentence, because he is adhering to "an established moral principle" in protecting his sources.

The Fresno Bee case came after indictments in November 1973 against a City Council- man who had allegedly taken a $4,000 bribe from a developer; the developer, who allegedly gave the bribe in return for a $11,530 sewer fee rebate, and a former city planning official who was indicted in the bribery conspiracy.

On Nov. 21, transcripts of the grand jury were sealed, and Superior Court Judge Denver C. Peckinpaugh gagged the parties. On Jan. 12, The Fresno Bee published a story under the bylines of Joe Rosato and Wil- liam Patterson, purporting to disclose the sealed grand jury testimony.

The two reporters and The Fresno Bee's managing editor, George Gruner, were ordered to appear before the judge with a copy of the grand jury tran- script. They said that they did not have it and invoked the California shield law. Judge Peckinpaugh refused to apply that law.

Later, the Bee city editor,

Jim Bort, was called to answer questions by Judge Peckinpaugh, and he, too, was held in con- tempt when he invoked the shield law. The contempt cita- tions were affirmed by the California Court of Appeals, which reiterated that the trial court's duty to investigate possi- ble violations of protective orders constituted an exception to the protection of the Califor- nia shield law.

The Fresno Bee case raises an interesting point because, unlike the Farr case, the four newsmen testified at a hearing that the materials had not been obtained from any of the 13 persons under the judge's gag order.

According to one friend-of-the-court brief, "innumerable secretaries" and other people had had access to transcripts and might have copied them, but the court made no effort to find out if any of them had been the source of the infor- mation. Instead, according to the brief, the court embarked on the "inherently chilling ques- tioning of newsmen," which had the effect of trying to use the press as an investigative arm of the judiciary.

A hearing on the case is scheduled for Friday.

Ford Reports on Fight To Reduce Paper Work

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, July 23—President Ford said last fall that he was going to cut down on the amount of paper work required by the Federal Government, and he did it.

The President reported to- day that, pursuant to his directive, the number of re- ports and forms required by Federal departments and agencies had been reduced by 12.5 percent, from 5,148 to 4,504.

However, the President said, the amount of time Americans spend filling out the remaining papers has gone up by a substantial total of 8.4 million hours over the same period.

The President said, in effect, that he would be tel- ling the departments and agencies to try again.

TENANTS LOBBYING ON RENT CONTROL

'Action Campaign' Started by 600 to Protect Laws

By IRVING SPIEGEL
Leaders of tenant groups started an "action campaign" yesterday to safeguard rent control, rent stabilization and tenant protection in conversion of rental buildings to cooperatives.

Some 600 tenants, headed by leaders of the New York State Tenants Coalition, a coordinating body of about 25 tenant groups, and Assemblyman John C. Dearie, Democrat of the Bronx, attended the rally at the Carnegie Endowment Building, at 345 East 46th Street.

Mr. Dearie said the "greatest real estate challenge to dismantle government legislative regulation of housing lies within the next 342 days, until the July 1, 1977, expiration date of two laws." He urged the group to pursue a "most intensive tenant-action campaign of lobbying, education and legislative involvement."

The laws to which Mr. Dearie alluded were the Emergency Tenant Protection Act, which, he said, "will affect hundreds of thousands of state-wide rent-stabilized tenants," and the one calling for 35 percent tenant approval for condominium or cooperative conversions.

The Bronx Assemblyman scored the real estate industry for what he said was its failure to submit any legislation that would result in a solution of the complex housing issues. He said that the industry was "instead clinging to two four-word slogans as their rallying cries, namely, 'rent control must go' and 'return to vacancy decorol'."

Mr. Dearie proposed that the new State Housing Commissioner, who is to be appointed soon, would convene a "landlord-tenant conference" in order to provide a forum for tenant representatives and landlord representatives in developing solutions.

Michael McKee, chairman of the tenants coalition, indicated a city-by-city organizing campaign would be started to develop new tenant groups and to involve them within the overall state coalition's work.

John McKean, president of the Tudor City Tenants Association, who presided, announced the formation of a mid-Manhattan Tenants Union, which "will unify tenants in some of the largest, most highly populated developments such as Tudor City, Stuyvesant Town, Peter Cooper, Kips Bay and other individual buildings."

1 Dies, 23 Are Hurt As Bus Hits a Rail On Dewey Thruway

By IRVING SPIEGEL

One woman was killed and 23 other passengers suffered injuries and shock when a Greyhound bus overturned on the Gov. Thomas E. Dewey Thruway yesterday afternoon near Herkimer, N.Y., in the Mohawk Valley area.

Several ambulances, including vehicles from a passing Army convoy, took the injured to Herkimer Memorial Hospital and Mohawk Valley General Hospital. The unidentified woman passenger injured fatally was pinned beneath the bus.

State troopers said the bus, carrying 44 passengers, had been going from Toronto to New York City. The bus overturned in the grassy areas between the divided sections of the highway, after hitting a guard rail.

At the Herkimer hospital, one passenger, suffering from shock, said a rain was falling at the time when the bus hit the guard rail, spun around twice and overturned on the grassy mound.

Herman Tabannor of East Orange, N.J., who was a passenger with his wife, Hilea, said that "for a moment I thought this was it as we sailed through the air. Passengers began screaming." The state police could not immediately determine what had caused the accident.

F.B.I. Is Told to Report On Its Rosenberg Files

WASHINGTON, July 23 (AP)—Federal District Judge June L. Green ordered the Federal Bureau of Investigation Friday to search the files of its 59 field offices for any information on Julius and Ethel Rosenberg and report back to her within 21 days. The Rosenbergs were executed in 1953 after being convicted of transmitting atomic secrets to the Soviet Union. Their sons, Robert and Michael Meeropol, who use the name of the couple who adopted them, have been seeking to reopen the case in hopes of clearing their parents' names.

Judge Green also ordered that a number of bureau officials submit to questioning by lawyers for the two Rosenberg sons. She named specifically Thomas H. Bresson, Thomas Lechanal, John Howard, Fred Griffith, Cornelius G. Sullivan and John Powers, as well as Leon Ulman, not identified in the order as a member of the bureau.

Students Feeling City U. Cuts

By JUDITH CUMMINGS

Michael Yonchenko, a 24-year-old veteran studying at Brooklyn College, needs the use of a videotape recorder to complete a project for his degree. The television department of the college fighting like every other one to survive the newest budget cuts, is seeking to dramatize its case, he says, by keeping the equipment idle for lack of maintenance money even though he offered to furnish the money himself.

"The level of priority goes from 'saving my own job' to 'saving somebody else's job,' then giving the students what they need," Mr. Yonchenko said of what he regarded as intramural maneuvering at his—and other students'—expense.

The view that student interests are being subordinated in budget decisions to those of faculty and the administration was very much in evidence last week among students attending summer school at Brooklyn College, as officials of all City University colleges grappled with the problem of cutting spending for the second year in a row.

$10 Million Cut
Brooklyn College cut more than $10 million from its budget last year at the 30,000 student campus and now is trying to forge an $8 million reduction to bring spending down to about $57 million, according to a spokesman.

The college last week obtained $1 million more from Dr. Robert J. Kibbee, chancellor of the City University, it intended to spend $2 million more that was supposed to be held in reserve. This additional money, however, was seen as having no great impact on the college's overall spending problem.

Accordingly, students reflecting on the pinch from the last year's reductions, were told by college officials that worse was in store.

Even summer school itself, many students paused to note, was cut back from two sessions to one for economy reasons. Students who were counting on accumulating 16 credits by fall can earn eight at most.

Compared with a year ago, students said, classes were fewer in size and there were fewer of them; teachers who were dismissed were among the most energetic and effective; necessities ranging from library books to toilet tissue were becoming scarce.

The issue of who got laid off, moreover, angered students even more than how many. Nearly every student interviewed had a story of a favorite young teacher who lost his job and a strong resentment of not only the seniority concept that guides dismissals but also of the departmental politics that they suspect influenced some of the decisions.

Books Called Outdated
"We're losing our best faculty," said Charles S. Brown, a student government officer. He also expressed outrage at what he termed the library's inability to purchase any new books for two years.

"There are no contemporary faculty, just like there are no contemporary books," Mr. Brown said. Some of these tenured people have been around 20 years and they haven't changed since," Mr. Brown said.

The college provost, Donald R. Reich, and other administrators praised what they said was a large proportion of faculty members who had willingly accepted not only larger classes but also considerable additional duties, including academic counseling, which used to be done by professional counselors.

But more than one acknowledged doubts about the educational consequences of such use of the faculty members. "Academically, it may not be the greatest," said Louis Fier, deputy chairman of the economics department, "but our backs are against the wall and if we turn away students—it's shortsighted, it would reduce our enrollment."

"We're in a competitive situation now," Professor Fier

The New York Times/Dan Goodrich
Michael Yonchenko, 24, relaxes on the Brooklyn College campus. To him, budget priorities are intramural nagging at the expense of the students.

added, alluding to the new City U. tuition charges that have increased the attractiveness of the state and private colleges. "We have an incentive to protect the program and give the kids their course work."

Faculty Decline Expected
Mr. Reich said Brooklyn had 1,350 faculty members a year ago, but expected to begin the fall term with only two-thirds that number. The administrative work force would take a comparable cut, he said.

Because classes had to be consolidated, with one teacher covering more students, according to the provost, more than 250 course sections were canceled last year. By fall there will be only half as many sections of some courses. Although enrollment is also expected to be down for September, fewer sections means that can be crowded out of required courses, making it harder for working people to arrange their class schedules.

Classrooms on the old campus—which is one of the most collegiate-looking in the university and even boasts a grassy quadrangle—were mostly designed for small classes of 25 or 30. Both officials and students say classes of 40 to 50 were not uncommon in the spring and will proliferate in the fall.

Among the students, however, there were those who felt that huge classes were little better than no classes at all. Louis Gonzales, a Spanish major, said he had 50 people in his philosophy class and nobody got a chance to say anything much about philosophy.

Mr. Brown and other student leaders said they were hoping to organize with Flatbush area merchants, who depend on the college, to convince Albany legislators to provide state financing at the same level they did to the State University, since the two systems now charge comparable tuition.

It was noted by the provost as well that tuition already was changing the attitude of the student body. The students are beginning, Mr. Reich said, to feel more like partners in an exchange and that they are entitled to greater control over what they are getting in return.

POLICE CHARGE 4 KILLED DETECTIVE

Off-Duty Officer Was Slain During Robbery in Queens

Four men who the police believe worked together on a number of robberies in New York and Chicago have been charged with the murder of an off-duty transit police detective in a $34,000 robbery in Long Island City, Queens, in June.

The detective, George Cavacalle, 34 years old, was shot three times as he was delivering a sack of money to the Van Dam Check Cashing Corporation at 52-41 Van Dam Street in Long Island City, where he worked part time as a guard.

The police say that two of the four men, Percy Moore, 26, and Richard Payton, 33, both of Chicago, attacked Mr. Cavacalle, grabbed the money as he fell and fled in a rented truck driven by Arthur Elliott, 25, of 1411 New York Avenue, Brooklyn.

About half a mile away the three men switched to another truck, according to the police, and drove to an apartment somewhere in Brooklyn, where the two Chicagoans changed clothes and were then driven to Newark International Airport for a flight home.

Alleged Planner Held
The police say they believe that the fourth man charged in the crime, Claude Holland, 36, of 36 Attorney Street on the Lower East Side, was the principal planner of the robbery and may have joined the others either during the switch of vehicles or in the Brooklyn apartment.

The police said they believed that Mr. Holland and the two Chicago men had met when the three were inmates in the state prison at Joliet, Ill.

They said they thought the four-man team had been involved in the robberies of at least two fur stores in Brooklyn, a third one in Queens and another check-cashing company in Queens, as well as in several robberies in Chicago. After his arrest on the homicide charge, Mr. Holland was booked in connection with two other robberies.

New York homicide detectives and transit police officers, who are working jointly on the case, said they believed that the men in New York City would plan crimes here, then flee to Chicago and have them executed there, and that the Chicago men would do the planning in their town and have the New Yorkers commit the robberies there.

Drift Is Checked

Yesterday, drift cards dropped by the agency's scientists 10 days ago at the sewage sludge dump site 12 miles off New York arrived at Jones Beach as part of a new wave of pollution.

The Long Island beach, where a mile-long stretch of sand was befoiled at high tide last night by garbage and sewage-related debris, remained entirely open.

New York Harbor every year would plan crimes here, then flee to Chicago and have them executed there, and that the Chicago men would do the planning in their town and have the New Yorkers commit the robberies there.

At that time the alternatives to the current site.

2 Congressmen Skeptical Of Ban on Sludge by 1981

By CHARLES KAISER
Special to The New York Times

HEMPSTEAD, L.I., July 24—Two members of a House of Representatives subcommittee expressed skepticism today over a Federal environmental official's statement that all municipalities in the New York metropolitan area would be required to end the ocean dumping of sewage sludge by 1981.

The statement by the Federal official, Gerald M. Hansler, regional administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, drew sharp questions from Representatives John B. Breaux, Democrat of Louisiana, and John M. Murphy, Democrat of Staten Island. The Congressman reminded Mr. Hansler that as recently as last March he said it would be impossible to end ocean dumping of sludge by 1982.

Mr. Hansler cited "technological advancements" as the reason for his agency's turnaround. "That's a remarkable achievement in only four months," said Mr. Breaux, who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Oceanography of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee.

"Is this because the committee is here, or is this realistic?" Mr. Breaux asked.

Mr. Hansler, who insisted he was being realistic, was one of more than 20 witnesses to testify at the all-day hearing held here by two subcommittees of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee to elicit testimony about the pollution that fouled 70 miles of Long Island beaches last month.

Commander R. Lawrence Swanson said it "would be naive" to think beach-pollution incidents of similar magnitude would not recur in the future.

Drift Is Checked
Commander Swanson is the manager of the New York Bight Project of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. Yesterday, drift cards dropped by the agency's scientists 10 days ago at the sewage sludge dump site 12 miles off New York arrived at Jones Beach as part of a new wave of pollution.

The Long Island beach, where a mile-long stretch of sand was befoiled at high tide last night by garbage and sewage-related debris, remained entirely open.

New York Harbor every year would plan crimes here, then flee to Chicago and have them executed there, and that the Chicago men would do the planning in their town and have the New Yorkers commit the robberies there.

New York State Tries to Improve Its Business Climate

OR FOR COUNTY REORGANIZED ON COAST

ges to Decide Fate in November Vote

Los Angeles, July 24—Los Angeles County may get its proposal to help unify it. The 4,000-square-mile county, now governed by five supervisors, is being studied by a public Commission on Government, a blue-ribbon group of citizens, recently established by the county mayor. He said that the present powers in the hands of seven million people are inefficient for the county's needs. The agency will study the county's needs, including its major areas, such as transportation, health care, urban needs, and education. The agency will also study the county's financial situation and its ability to raise funds. The agency will report its findings to the county board of supervisors in November.

Research Planned in Cave That Yielded Rare Fossils

CARLSBAD, N.M., July 24 (UPI)—Officials at Carlsbad Caverns National Park say there are plans for research in an undeveloped cave where fossil remains of extinct animals were discovered earlier this year.

Officials confirmed Wednesday the discovery of the fossilized bones in a small pond in Musk Ox Cave, an infrequently visited grotto in a remote area about 15 miles southwest of the main cavern. The most unusual find in the cavern were the bones of what was believed to have been a bush ox, an extinct animal similar to the musk ox that roamed the Southwest 10,000 to 20,000 years ago.

"We anticipate more research in this area," said a management assistant, Bob Crisman. "We think it would provide a lot of scientific value in enabling us to determine what life was like in the area at the time these animals were present."

Boat-Retriever Drowns

TRENTON, July 23 (UPI)—Nathaniel Marshall, 22 years old, Trenton, drowned in the Delaware River last night when he was caught in a strong current while trying to retrieve a boat. Forty people on the river-side were unaware of the drowning because it happened so fast, a spokesman for the Coast Guard Auxiliary said.

Mayor Proposed

ed, the mayor would have executive limited-year terms with reappointment and removal heads and veto passed by the board. He would have more than the mayor of Los Angeles and would be paid $100,000 a year.

Commission hopes that the mayor would help unify the county and decrease the remoteness of some county government movements in the South Bay and San Fernando and San Gabriel valleys because they get few services from the county even though it spends $3 billion a year.

Groups and Women Dissatisfied with the picture because every candidate for the supervisors and sheriff, assessor, and attorney has been a woman, although 11 percent of the county is black and more than 50 percent is Spanish-speaking.

prises engaged in manufacturing or research and are of no help to other kinds of businesses that may want to expand. They also apply only to companies able or willing to buy buildings and do not help the substantial number of small firms that prefer to rent their facilities.

Nevertheless, Mr. Dyson believes that some progress has been made even in reducing these disadvantages. One such step was the first passage by the Legislature of constitutional amendments that were needed to expand the powers of the Job Development Authority.

The development agency is the body that offers second mortgages for plant expansions or startups. The amendments, which must be passed again by the next Legislature and then approved by the voters in a referendum, would permit the agency to make loans for machinery and equipment in renovated, as well as new, plants and increase its borrowing authority from $150 million to $300 million.

By an executive order that Governor Carey has agreed to sign, the state soon would be able to cut much of its red tape. This would be accomplished by requiring agencies to act within 180 days on license and permit applications and by instituting a computerized monitoring system that would track each application and show where it may be held up.

A Preliminary Step

The Legislature failed to repeal the ban on exploration and natural gas in Lake Erie, but as a preliminary step to repeal, it did give $50,000 to the Environmental Conservation Department for a study to develop rules and regulations for such exploration.

The state also created an office to develop a coherent policy on energy, and New York City was authorized to sign 20-year contracts with concerns willing to build waste-recovery projects. The previous five-year limit on contracts inhibited investment in garbage-burning plants that could cut disposal costs 40 percent and could supply more than 15 percent of current energy needs.

Among other measures sought by businesses and enacted were the lowering of license fees for small wineries, the relaxation of regulations that required mining companies to reclaim land that had been worked many years ago, the postponement for 18 months of the "impact statements" that were required for new businesses under the Environmental Quality Review Act and reduction of estate taxes on family-owned farms.

The Legislature also reduced or repealed several taxes that business concerns out of the state. It repealed the bond-transfer tax and the city's surcharge on the estate tax. It also exempted Wall Street market makers, those specialist brokers who buy or sell assigned stocks if necessary to maintain an orderly market, from the stock-transfer tax, thereby halting the movement of brokerages to New Jersey.

Governor Carey also helped to organize the Coalition of Northeast Governors, whose seven members have pledged to cooperate to turn Federal policies to the economic advantage of the region.

"Obviously, we still have a long way to go," Mr. Dyson said in an interview. "But I think we have made real progress, and the prospects for further improvements in the business climate look very good."

To get this message across, the Commerce Department will soon begin running newspaper advertisements that will say: "If you think New York State hasn't done anything for business, there are 23 reasons why you are wrong."

The ads will list some of the accomplishments of the last seven months and end with the sentence "We've just begun to fight."

Tax reform is high on the Commissioner's list of priorities for the next session of the Legislature. He hopes for repeal of the current surcharges on the corporate and personal income taxes and at least a start on the recommendation of a task force from the Municipal Assistance Corporation that the state income tax on the highest incomes be cut, in steps from 15 to 10 percent.

The state's income tax, the highest in the nation, is thought to be a major reason why businessmen move their companies and themselves to other states.

Asked if his hopes were realistic, Mr. Dyson cited the stock-transfer tax relief that was enacted at this session and said: "If, in an election year, politicians were willing to give a $42-million tax relief to Wall Street, the climate has changed enough to make anything possible."

To get this message across, the Commerce Department will

Opera: Bayreuth Is 100

Scene From 'Meistersinger' Under Whom Opens Festival's Centenary

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

FIFTH West German July 23—The 100th anniversary of the Bayreuth festival started Friday night, and the program consisted of speeches. After the concert, the curtain revealed the set for the same opera. The chorus was on costume and ready for it was this scene scheduled to end. But first there were 60 minutes of talk- ing and most un- ch came from Pres- ter Scheel of West It struck one as inconceivable from any politician. Mr. some 35 minutes to deliver a minia- ture on 19th-cen- tury social, musi- cal and esthetic with special atten- tion to Wagner's speech, and copies of his text were handed to the press, but Mr. Wagner, looking at his mental watch, decided that there had been enough talking for the night, and with a few brisk words cleared the stage for the final scene of "Die Meistersinger."

Mr. Böhm was the conductor, and this was the only appearance during the festival for the octogenarian. He is now the grand old man of German conducting, and is to this generation what Wilhelm Furtwängler and Hans Knappertsbusch were before the war. Unlike most old conductors, Mr. Böhm has become more lively. His tempos get faster and faster, and there is a wonderful alertness to his work. He may be somewhat feeble physically, but an ardent spirit burns within.

"Die Meistersinger" has always been one of Bayreuth's handier productions, and there is nothing more calculated to send an audience happily into the street. Especially a German audience, bathing in Wagner's apostrophe to German art and the German spirit. Principal male singers were Theo Adan as Hans Sachs, Hans Sotin as Pogner, Klaus Hürte as Beckmesser, Rene Kollo as Walther and Hanna Lore Bode as Eva. All have been identified with their roles for some time. This is a standard Bayreuth as well as international "Meistersinger." The performance went beautifully.

But the real substance of the Bayreuth centenary starts Saturday with a new staging of the four operas of the "Ring" cycle. It was the "Ring" that was heard for the first time as a complete unit 100 years ago at Bayreuth.

Since 1951, when Bayreuth was reopened by the Wagner brothers, there have been two stagings of the "Ring," both reflecting the revolutionary ideas that Wolfgang and the late Wieland Wagner had introduced. Now comes a third, staged by Patrice Chereau and conducted by Pierre Boulez. Everybody who has seen the rehearsals says there are going to be surprises.

Dance: Bella Lewitzky

Many of the Coast Choreographer Connecticut College Festival

By DON MCDONAGH

NDON, Conn., July 23—The first performance of the Connecticut College Dance Festival, featuring the work of choreographer Bella Lewitzky, was held at the college yesterday.

Lewitzky, who has been in Los Angeles for many years, is one of the most talented choreographers in the world. Her work is characterized by its clarity and its sense of rhythm. In her new work, "Cerebration," she explores the relationship between the mind and the body.

The festival, which is the first of its kind in the Northeast, will feature the work of several other choreographers, including Robert Hughes, Kurt Weinhilmer, and Sean Greene. The festival is being held at Connecticut College, which is one of the most beautiful campuses in the country.

AN PORTERS DENIED BACK PAY

R. July 24 (AP)—Federal District Court Judge Arraj had ruled last March in favor of the porters' claims for back wages because they were denied promotion to the higher paying jobs but delayed a decision on how much compensation they should receive.

The judge said his formula for payment would "put the plaintiffs in the economic position they would have been in but for the acts of discrimination."

JETHRO TULL BAND AT SHEA STADIUM

Two Other English Rock Groups Also Appear

Shea Stadium reverberated to the sound of rock music again Friday evening, but it reverberated soggily. While three groups from England performed under a gigantic umbrella held aloft by two cranes, 40,000 to 50,000 fans sat in the bleachers under ponchos and regular-size umbrellas. There were dry periods, but rain fell again and again throughout the 4½-hour show.

The opening acts were grouped by two English guitarists, Rory Gallagher and Robin Trower. Mr. Gallagher went on early and had finished his standard recycling of the blues before the stadium was full. Mr. Trower, who is recycling Jimi Hendrix as well as older bluesmen such as B. B. King and Arthur Crudup, performed after an interminable intermission.

His guitar technique is admirable, but he has abandoned almost entirely the lyricism that was his trademark during his long stay with the group Procol Harum. Once a melodious player, Mr. Trower is now a member in good standing of the school that sings along through sludgy tempos playing uninteresting riffs and overdone blues licks.

A New Wrinkle

Jethro Tull, the star attraction, appeared after another interminable delay with a new wrinkle, a live television hook-up that projected close-up images of the band on huge screens. The idea is a good one, but throughout most of Mr. Tull's set the cameras focused on Ian Anderson, the group's founder, songwriter, and sometime rhythm guitarist and flautist. Mr. Anderson mugged obsessively, but his repertoire of grimaces was soon exhausted and the unending eye-rolling and head-shaking captured by the camera grew tiresome.

The group's music wore thin almost as rapidly. The rest of

Ballet: Fracci Dances With Nureyev

Italy's Prima Ballerina Guest Artist at Met

By ANNA KISSELGOFF
Carla Fracci was scheduled to appear as guest artist with Rudolf Nureyev and the National Ballet of Canada Friday night at the Metropolitan Opera House—and she did. But not exactly as planned and the program was the worse for it. Still, it was the first time Mr. Nureyev and Italy's prima ballerina had danced together in

Performs With National Troupe From Canada

New York and the combination of two such ballet personalities was newsworthy.

The original idea was to have both stars perform in "La Sylphide," but Mr. Nureyev's foot injury caused him to bow out of this Bournonville classic with its stressful jumps. Instead, the program consisted of a repeat of "Four Schumann Pieces" from the night before with Mr. Nureyev, the excerpted Act II of "La Sylphide" with Miss Fracci and Frank Augustyn, and Act III of the Canadian production of "The Sleeping Beauty" with Mr. Nureyev and Miss Fracci in the grand as de deux.

Packing Houses Lose Plea To Curb Beef-Grading Rule

DALLAS, July 24—A Federal judge says that although the Department of Agriculture apparently did not consider the impact of new beef grading standards on the cattle industry, it acted within its jurisdiction in issuing the guidelines.

Thirteen packing houses in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas had sought an injunction halting the new regulations as they applied to "baby beef"—beef from slaughtered animals between 10 and 14 months old.

In a four-page opinion Wednesday denying the injunction, District Court Judge Patrick Higginbotham said: "While the Court would not have drawn the line [between good and standard grades] as it was drawn, it cannot say that the rules are without rational justification."

Performers With National Troupe From Canada

matter. Even in an act that is presented out of context, Miss Fracci's outstanding characterization makes its point. To a whole generation, she will be a 20th-century Tagliani, a modern-day Sylphide. Her grace, her floating, light quality and her detailed sophisticated acting all create the romantic imagery that makes this ballet what it is.

On this occasion, Miss Fracci again gave us a very sweet Sylphide, full of charm in her child-like delights (no sylph claps her hands as winsomely as Miss Fracci) and genuinely touching in her death scene. She was partnered with true nobility by Mr. Augustyn, who has obviously fulfilled his early promises.

In the "Sleeping Beauty" except, there are several cast changes that should be noted. Veronica Tennant led the Pas de Cinq with sharpness and true ballerina manner. Tomas Schramek's new Bluebird, a bit weak in the coda, nonetheless was a model of classic style in the adagio with Karen Kain and in his solo.

MEXICO CRITICIZED BY A JEWISH GROUP

B'nai B'rith has written to President Luis Echeverria Alvarez of Mexico complaining that his Government has reneged on a pledge to avoid anti-Israeli activities.

The letter from the Jewish organization was prompted by Mexico's policy statement recently denouncing the Israeli raid that rescued more than 100 hijacking victims held in Uganda.

Mexico and leading Jewish organizations in the United States have been at odds since last fall because of Mexico's vote in the United Nations in support of an Arab-sponsored resolution defining Zionism as a form of racism. Many leading organizations had canceled plans for group trips to Mexico, and the Mexican Government then made efforts to assure them of its friendship toward Israel.

Andrea Doria Speculation And Legends Will Not Die

By WERNER BAMBERGER

Twenty years ago today, the 29,500-gross-ton Italian luxury liner Andrea Doria and the Swedish passenger ship Stockholm collided in the Atlantic. The Andrea Doria sank the following morning, and 33 lives were lost in the accident.

In the intervening two decades, speculation has continued on the cause of the accident. And there still are legends of a treasure trove aboard the Doria and recurring talk of trying to locate the vessel.

Responsibility for the sinking has never been fixed by a court of law. The litigation growing out of the accident was terminated by out-of-court settlements, which included $6 million for third-party losses.

Admiralty-law sources and others familiar with the accident attribute the disaster to these specific causes:

- Improper radar procedure on the Doria.
- Failure by the Italian ship to ballast her empty fuel tanks, thus diminishing the stability of the liner.
- A missing watertight door leading to the Doria's engine room.
- Failure by the Doria to turn to her right in a situation where two ships meet head on, or nearly head on. At the last moment the Doria turned to her left.
- What went down with the Doria in valuable and cargo was no longer determined because there are no longer any copies of her cargo.
- The only item of value that definitely can be documented as having gone down with the ship is a $200,000 hand-built automobile, made in Italy for the Chrysler Corporation. The vehicle, called the Norseman, was a highly sophisticated prototype with advanced construction and engineering features.
- Will the Doria ever be raised? Most maritime observers doubt it, and point out that she lies in 225 feet of water some 60 miles off Nantucket Island—a depth too great for conventional salvage.
- The 700-foot Doria weighed 19,568 tons. At present, shipbreakers pay $100 for each ton of light displacement tonnage. At that price, she would bring a little under $2 million, from which would have to be deducted the cost of salvage and the cost of repairing her sufficiently for towing to a breaker's yard in Spain or in Taiwan.

On that basis, shipping observers feel she would turn out to be a loser again.

Foreign import trade by sea and air through the Port of New York increased substantially in the 1976 fiscal year.

Fred R. Boyett, regional commissioner of customs, reported last week that customs revenues in the year ended June 30 increased 9.46 percent to $1.49 billion from 1.4 billion in the preceding annual period.

The bulk of the increase was accounted for by more activity at Kennedy International Airport, where customs collections rose by 22.9 percent, from $334 million in the 1975 fiscal year to $410.6 million in fiscal 1976.

Collections at the piers increased by 3.3 percent, to $939.6 million from $910.1 million. The grand total also includes customs activity at Perth Amboy, Newark and Albany.

The year's activity also brought a "fringe-benefit" not included in the totals.

Mr. Boyett said one-tenth of a pound of heroin, 163.7 pounds of cocaine, 4,542 pounds of hashish, 3,965.4 pounds of marijuana and 2,259,371 tablets of other drugs, such as barbiturates and LSD, were seized and confiscated during the 1976 fiscal year.

The ceremonies will take place at San Juan, P.R., on Aug. 8 shortly after the new $69 million vessel arrives at her new "home port."

FIG TREE IS ISSUE IN FLORIDA FIGHT

Developer Wants It Moved So He Can Use Site

Special to The New York Times

PALM BEACH, Fla., July 24—A gigantic fig tree here has become the center of an ecological and legal controversy that could have constitutional implications.

The tree, called Ficus mysoirensis after the state of Mysore in India, of which it is native, is about 65 feet tall. Its huge and intertwined branches shade an area of nearly 100 feet in diameter in the center part of the town.

On one side of the controversy are the Palm Beach Town Council and the Garden Club of Palm Beach, a very influential conservation group here. They want to preserve the tree, which stands on private property, but which is protected under the town's 1973 historic and specimen tree ordinance.

On the other side is Tibor Hollo, a Miami developer who owns the land on which the tree stands. He has petitioned to have it moved to another location so that he can erect an office building on the site.

Last November and January, the Town Council denied Mr. Hollo's request. It agreed with the Garden Club that the fig would not survive the considerable pruning necessary for the transplanting. So now Mr. Hollo is suing the town. He alleges that the tree ordinance is unconstitutional because it has deprived him of the right to due process and to the legitimate use of his land.

The town and the club, which is helping the defense, contend that the tree is unique, that its beauty constitutes an aesthetic value that the ordinance is preserving for all Palm Beach citizens.

They argue further that the damage suffered by Mr. Hollo is minimal because he still can have reasonable use of his land.

'A Beautiful Tree'

According to some legal experts, the lawsuit that Circuit Court Judge Cuveler Smith is scheduled to hear in West Palm Beach this fall is without precedent, at least in the South.

While parts of Key West and New Orleans, among other cities, have been declared historic preserves, no individual tree is known to have been singled out for historic preservation.

Fig trees are fairly common in Florida. But botanists regard the Palm Beach fig as exceptional because of its size, and even Mr. Hollo calls it a "beautiful tree."

In the late 1880's, when it was planted, the fig stood on the grounds of Whitehall, an estate of Henry Morrison Flagler, a pioneer of Florida. The site is now a parking lot of the Royal Poinciana Plaza, operated by Atlantic Coast Investing Company, which is owned by Mr. Hollo. The plaza houses boutiques, jewelry shops, a restaurant and other establishments.

In 1973, several years after Mr. Hollo purchased the property, the Town Council passed its tree ordinance, which provided for a survey of noteworthy trees in Palm Beach. Several months later, 88 trees out of some 100 mentioned in the survey by the town forester were designated as historic specimens and put under the protection of the ordinance.

The action was inspired by the Garden Club, one of the oldest clubs here. All of its 70 or so members are socially prominent, which here by definition also means politically influential.

Founded in 1928 by Mrs. Alfred G. Key, the club has been instrumental in the planting here of stately royal palms, cocoons ornamental trees and bougainvillea vines and in the immaculate appearance of gardens and lawns, which are the pride of Palm Beach.

New York Cuts Welfare Spending

New York City's Human Resources Administrator, J. Henry Smith, announced what was described as "the successful completion of the first of seven programs aimed at reducing city welfare expenditures by $20 million in the current fiscal year." "This initial program," the announcement said, "has resulted in the reclassification of 2,52 cases from the home relief category (which is financed entirely by state and city money) to the aid-to-dependent children category (in which the Federal Government provides 50 percent of the financing). As a result, Mr. Smith said, city tax levy expenditures will be reduced by $3,735,000 in the 1976-77 fiscal year.

Off-Duty Policeman Is Shot

An off-duty police officer was shot in the right thigh in a traffic dispute with two men at an intersection in the Bensonhurst section of Brooklyn shortly before 6 A.M. yesterday. The officer, Joseph Molloy, 36 years old, was reported in good condition at Coney Island Hospital. A police spokesman said that the officer, in a van, was cut off by two men in a sports car on 86th Street near 17th Avenue. After an exchange of words, the passenger in the sports car fired at the officer with a .25-caliber pistol. The two men, described as in their 20's, then fled in their car.

Connecticut Hepatitis Cases at 41

Cases of hepatitis reported at the Mansfield Training School in Mansfield, Conn., have risen to 41, with two more cases reported this week. The state has quarantined four buildings at the school, part of Knight Hospital on the grounds of the school and a group home in Hartford since the first cases were reported in May. The 41 cases include 36 of the 1,100 residents at the institution for retarded children and adults and five staff members.

Radiation Bureau Saving Proposed

A saving of $250,000 a year could be obtained by the city if the Bureau of Radiation Control was placed on a self-sustaining basis, according to an audit released by Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin. The bureau operates at an annual cost of $800,000. Revenue from radiation-inspection fees amounts to $300,000. The $500,000 deficit is borne equally by the city and the state.

Earthworm Industry: A Sleeping Giant

Educator Samuel Chatam expects to earn 1/2 MILLION DOLLARS in '76 as a part-time worm farmer.

A college professor who is moonlighting his way to a fortune with his one year old earthworm farm says, "The earthworm business is a sleeping giant with national and international opportunities that are mind-boggling." Samuel Chatam of S&R Worm Garden said, "My main problem right now is meeting the demand for these worms. I'm in need of additional growers who will hopefully sell their harvest back to me to help fill my demand."

At 8 PM Monday, July 26 and Wednesday, July 28, Chatam says his company will conduct 2-hr. FREE classes at the Washington Irving High School, 40 Irving Place and 16th Street in New York. The company will also run the same 2-hr. FREE classes at 8 PM Tuesday, July 27 and Thursday, July 29 at the Dwight Morrow High School, 274 Knickerbocker Rd., Englewood, N.J. Each of the two classes will feature a different aspect of worm cultivation.

"We want people who do not mind getting their hands dirty," Chatam explained. These classes are open to the general public. A third session will be held for those who purchase worms. Anyone who is interested in earning an additional income should attend the first class meeting in one of two locations.

"It does not require a large amount of money to begin a worm business," Chatam says. "A potential worm farmer can begin with a small investment of less than $400 and build to a size he chooses."

In stating the attractive aspect of the business, Chatam explains "First a farmer does not need laborers before he begins making a profit. Second, this may be operated as a part-time business. Third, special skills are required. Fourth, a grower doubles his economic base every 90 days. I do know of another business which is so.

Run this through your computer," Chatam said. "A 3x8 bin worms should net between $5 and $65 monthly. If a person starts with one bin and splits it every day, by the end of the year he has 32 bins of worms worth $250 to $325 per bin." Chatam began his worm farm in July with $40,000 investment which he is now worth over $300,000. "Anyone from 8 to 80 can make money in this business. If he has the resources to get started, and not afraid to get his hands dirty," Chatam said.

Julius Cardinal Dopfner Dies; German Liberal Cleric Was 61

Julius Cardinal Dopfner, who campaigned for religious freedom in East Germany when he was Archbishop of Berlin, died of a heart attack yesterday at his home in Munich, West Germany. He was 61 years old.

The Cardinal, Archbishop of Munich-Preising since he left Berlin in 1961, was recently treated for a heart disorder. His death was announced by the diocesan office.

Once the youngest bishop in Europe, at the time of his appointment, he reached the peak of the 14,700-foot Matterhorn at 32.

Cardinal Dopfner became known as a strong campaigner for religious freedom when he criticized antireligious measures of the East German Government when he was Archbishop of Berlin from 1957 to 1961. The East Germans then forbade him to travel within the country, though he was still allowed to work in East Berlin.

Liberal but Anti-Abortion In Berlin, he also became known for his ecumenical attitude. "The Catholics," he once said, "openly admit that they have to thank Protestant theology for insights they would not want to miss."

Despite a number of liberal attitudes, Cardinal Dopfner spoke out against the liberalization of abortion laws. In spite of his repeated requests to be allowed to stay in Berlin, he was appointed Archbishop of Munich in 1961.

He was born Aug. 13, 1913 to a peasant family in Hausen, a small Franconian town in northern Bavaria. He studied philosophy at Wurzburg University and theology at the Collegium of Hungaria in Rome, where he was ordained in 1939.

After serving in Franconia, he went to Wurzburg, where, in 1948, Pope Pius XII made him the youngest bishop in Europe. In January 1957 he was appointed bishop of Berlin and a year later was named a Cardinal.

Clashes With Conservative The Cardinal, named by Pope Paul VI in 1963 as one of the influential moderators at the Second Vatican Council, won a reputation of a progressive after several heated clashes with the archconservative Alfredo Cardinal Ottaviani.

In one dispute, Cardinal Dopfner said Cardinal Ottaviani had concealed a statement by liberal Dutch bishops advocating more power and independence for the bishops. On another occasion, Cardinal Dopfner accused the Italian of attempting to propose liberalization of the liturgy.

Cardinal Ottaviani is said to have retorted, "Are these church fathers planning a revolt?"

However, Cardinal Dopfner seemed to defy classification in such simple terms as "conservative" or "progressive."

"Basically he's a conservative, but he's happy with the image of a progressive," a Bavarian correspondent who knew the Cardinal once said.

A prominent Roman Catholic writer and commentator has put it another way: "There's no question that he's on the side of the progressives in Germany, but there is this tension inside of him."

The Cardinal, Pope Paul said in a message to Josef Cardinal Hoffner of Cologne, "enjoyed the esteem and affection of many far beyond the German borders." He termed the death "a heavy loss."

The death reduces the College of Cardinals to 79 members, 116 are below 80 years of age and therefore eligible to vote for Pope Paul's successor. The death also reduces the number of German Cardinals to five.

Leonard C. Mallet, Ex-Head of Pratt & Whitney Dies in Connecticut at 71

Leonard C. Mallet, of Farmington, Conn., who headed the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Group of the United Technologies Corporation from 1958 to 1967, died Friday at his home. His age was 71.

Mr. Mallet saw the division become a leading designer, developer and producer of jet aircraft engines during his period as head of the group. He retired from United Technologies, then known as the United Aircraft Corporation, in 1970 as a group vice president.

As vice president, a post he assumed in 1967, Mr. Mallet supervised the operations of Pratt & Whitney's aircraft and chemical systems divisions, the two propulsion branches of the corporation.

Mr. Mallet was born in New York City and attended Columbia University before graduating from New York University. He began his career in aviation in 1927 as a time keeper with the Fairchild Airplane Manufacturing Company in Farmingdale, L.I.

He once told an interviewer that "the kids when they grow up, don't really know what they want to do."

"But in 1927," he said, "I wanted to go to work with a new industry. At that time it was aviation."

After becoming an accountant, Mr. Mallet worked for the Sikorsky Aero Engineering Corporation of Stratford, Conn. Sikorsky is now a division of United Technologies.

In 1937 he transferred to Pratt & Whitney as assistant treasurer and divisional accountant.

During World War II, Mr. Mallet organized a branch in Kansas City, Mo., which manufactured 7,001 aircraft engines between 1942 and 1945. Mr. Mallet also served as assistant general manager of the company and general manager of the division in Connecticut.

The American Society of Metals awarded him its lifetime membership in 1967 for his contributions to the metals industry.

Mr. Mallet served as a member of the United Technologies board of directors from 1963 until his retirement in 1970. He was also a director of the Stanley Works of New Britain, Conn., a tool manufacturer.

Survivors include his wife, the former Edith Olive Kay; a daughter, Beatrice Ullman of Los Angeles. A private funeral will be held tomorrow.

Leonard C. Mallet, Ex-Head of Pratt & Whitney Dies in Connecticut at 71

Leonard C. Mallet, of Farmington, Conn., who headed the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Group of the United Technologies Corporation from 1958 to 1967, died Friday at his home. His age was 71.

Mr. Mallet saw the division become a leading designer, developer and producer of jet aircraft engines during his period as head of the group. He retired from United Technologies, then known as the United Aircraft Corporation, in 1970 as a group vice president.

As vice president, a post he assumed in 1967, Mr. Mallet supervised the operations of Pratt & Whitney's aircraft and chemical systems divisions, the two propulsion branches of the corporation.

Mr. Mallet was born in New York City and attended Columbia University before graduating from New York University. He began his career in aviation in 1927 as a time keeper with the Fairchild Airplane Manufacturing Company in Farmingdale, L.I.

He once told an interviewer that "the kids when they grow up, don't really know what they want to do."

"But in 1927," he said, "I wanted to go to work with a new industry. At that time it was aviation."

After becoming an accountant, Mr. Mallet worked for the Sikorsky Aero Engineering Corporation of Stratford, Conn. Sikorsky is now a division of United Technologies.

In 1937 he transferred to Pratt & Whitney as assistant treasurer and divisional accountant.

During World War II, Mr. Mallet organized a branch in Kansas City, Mo., which manufactured 7,001 aircraft engines between 1942 and 1945. Mr. Mallet also served as assistant general manager of the company and general manager of the division in Connecticut.

The American Society of Metals awarded him its lifetime membership in 1967 for his contributions to the metals industry.

Mr. Mallet served as a member of the United Technologies board of directors from 1963 until his retirement in 1970. He was also a director of the Stanley Works of New Britain, Conn., a tool manufacturer.

Survivors include his wife, the former Edith Olive Kay; a daughter, Beatrice Ullman of Los Angeles. A private funeral will be held tomorrow.

In a Life of Firsts, She Has Few Regrets

By NAN ROBERTSON

She was painted six times by Rouault and three times by Dufy; she photographed Monet, Maillol, Pirandello, Prokofiev, Saint-Exupéry; a bust of her wearing an Agnès hat is in the Prado in Madrid; she founded the first American illustrated press service in Europe; she was the first foreign correspondent to capture the coming of the Russo-Finnish War; her pictures of children uprooted by the Nazi invasions of Europe broke Franklin Roosevelt's heart and made Winston Churchill lift the Atlantic Blockade so that Red Cross ships with $4,000,000 worth of help could reach them.

When Therese Bonney took her camera into World War II one result was remarkable photos of children fleeing France.

is not interested in what the war does to or with soldiers. She will focus her lens on the aftermath of war—its effect on people, their lives, their homes, their possessions, their hope and their despair.

This is what Therese Bonney did. The impact of her devastating pictures of the innocents of war, later collected in the book, "Europe's Children," helped lead to the foundation of UNICEF after World War II.

Adopted a Child
It was never enough. She adopted and commandeered food and clothes for a village in Alsace, which was 85 percent destroyed in the Battle of the Colmar Pocket.

Miss Bonney's sharp brown eyes fell on "a little peasant boy, 10 years old, and I adopted him for myself, not for any particular reason. There were other children perhaps more appealing, more intelligent. His father was a tender of vines."

She entered him in a lycée and the teachers said, "there's nothing to be gotten out of him," but she and he persisted. He won a scholarship to the University of Strasbourg, went on to the elitist National School of Administration and married the daughter of an industrialist.

"He is a technocrat now, with a big position, one of Giscard's men," Miss Bonney said, with a touch of scorn and sadness. "He has not kept my letters."

"Giscard" is Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, the President of France.
"About Love"
She was asked whether she had ever married, or committed herself for a long time to another person. "No," she answered, "I never did. A young Australian journalist asked me recently, 'What did you do about sex?' I told her, 'I didn't do anything about sex. I did something about love.'"

Miss Bonney has also done something about what she calls "righteous indignation," which is what impelled her to go back to the Sorbonne to seek her second doctorate, on the aging. She has lobbied in Washington to get Medicare benefits extended to Americans living outside the United States and may present her thesis in photographs an intellectual with degrees from the University of California, Harvard and Columbia, a candidate for a doctorate of letters at the Sorbonne. And she was beautiful.

"The people treated me like Pocahontas. They trailed me around everywhere and called me 'La Belle et Grande Américaine,'" she said.

At the invitation of the French Government, she picked 133 students to fill the scholarships offered by Smith, Wellesley, Vassar and other women's colleges in the United States.

Her oral defense of her Sorbonne thesis, on the subject of "Ethical Ideas in the Theater of Alexandre Dumas," drew coverage in the Paris press.

"But I suddenly realized that I was getting all my experience of life through books," she recalled. "I wanted real contacts with the raw material, with the men and women who made up the colorful, stimulating pageant of modern European life. I didn't want to be merely a looker-on. So I conceived the idea of taking photographs."

"Pictures with ideas," she called them. "I only took pictures of people whom I considered were doing vital things, whether those things had to do with the destiny of nations or merely the amusing of them." Statesmen, cabaret singers, furniture designers, artists, dressmakers; she photographed them all.

Some became her friends. Madeleine Vionnet, the inventor of the bias cut, was an intimate; Miss Bonney still has a 1921 Vionnet sheath worked with tiny flowers ("Today it would cost a fortune to reproduce it if you could get the handwork done") and a sweater Schiaparelli later designed just for her. Lurcat gave her his first tapestry design; it was embroidered by his mother.

Photo Exhibition

Miss Bonney furnished her Paris studio in Art Deco style and still works behind a forged iron desk created by Pierre Chareau. Dufy was fascinated by her and Rouault could not paint her enough, it seemed. "When she saw her first Dufy portrait she said, 'Dufy, I don't have a double chin.'"

"So," she said, "he took his brush and added another one."
Dufy saw her off at the train carrying her to Finland in 1939, when she sensed war was brewing. "We may never see each other again," he told her, and gave her a small oil of a nude. She carried it in her knapsack, then and on later battlefields.
On Dec. 11, 1940, the Museum of Modern Art put Therese Bonney's exhibition of 20 photographs chosen from 10,000 negatives, on display. It was called "War Comes to the People: History Written With the Lens."

The museum's press release noted that she was returning immediately to Europe with a Carnegie grant "to continue her self-assignment. She is not going as just another war photographer. She do something." She thinks "it could be an inspiration to the young."

She discussed her month at Colgate University, and her feeling welled up, as it always does when she comes home. "What stands out is the superb kindness of the American people. It is a country of infinite kindness, of infinite concern," she said. "The French are not kind." The interview shifted from the Ritz Tower to a Kabinka, a mi vodka, lemon juice, cot Huguier. She is clearly of the woman in this count. "What stands out is the wonder of the that honored it."

Then she lifted "Happy birthday Therese Bonney sal our revolutions."

7 Citizens Radios Silenced For Interference in Jersey

NEWARK, July 23 (AP)—The Federal Communications Commission has silenced seven New Jersey citizens band radio operators using equipment said to be powerful enough to interfere with police, airport and hospital calls. United States marshals raided the homes where the equipment was being used yesterday and confiscated $10,000 worth of transmitters, receivers and other sophisticated radio apparatus that allegedly violated F.C.C. rules. The raid was part of an F.C.C. program to rid the airwaves of citizens band talk that leaks into commercial and emergency channels—a problem made critical by the growth of the citizens band radios.

Under F.C.C. rules, operators may use equipment with four watts and may not communicate with stations more than 150 miles away.

Some of the stations closed this morning were transmitting on over 1,000 watts of power and were communicating as far away as California, said United States Attorney Jonathan L. Goldstein.

Accused of Robbery

The other counts charge that each of the suspects "did then and there seize, confine, inveigle, entice, decoy, abduct, conceal, kidnap and carry away" each of the 26 Chowchilla children, 5 to 14 years old, and that the suspects robbed 16 of the victims of personal property. In California, first degree robbery, generally referred to as armed robbery, is punishable by not less than five years imprisonment, according to Miss Epstein, and second degree robbery carries a minimum term of one year. There is no maximum.

The spokesman added that the bureau continued, as it had from the beginning, to offer its identification services and laboratory facilities to the local authorities. Arrest warrants for all three suspects were signed late last night by Judge Howard C. Green of the Chowchilla judicial district, who also set the bail. The judge also sealed for 10 days certain confidential information provided to him by law enforcement officials to substantiate their assertion that the three men had been involved in the kidnapping, the theft of personal property and the imprisonment of the victims in a moving-van trailer buried in a quarry in Alameda County.

Face 43 Charges

The suspects were accused of 27 counts of kidnapping, under Section 209 of the Penal Code of California, and 16 counts of robbery, under Section 211. Additional charges may be filed later, according to prosecutors. According to Nancy Epstein, the Madera County Deputy District Attorney, Section 209 defines kidnapping as the taking of a person with the intent to extort "money and other things of value." It carries a minimum jail term of 84 months before parole can be granted and a maximum of life imprisonment without parole if a defendant is convicted of kidnapping that involved bodily harm to a victim. The complaint, filed last night with Judge Green by Madera County's Acting District Attorney, Charles Hoffman, and County Sheriff Edward B. Bates, charged that the driver of the bus, Frank Edward Ray Jr., 55, had "suffered a bodily harm."

Suspect's Ex-Wife Says He Shot at Teen-agers

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, July 24—The former wife of a suspect in the kidnapping of 26 California school children said today that he had refused to have children and had become so angry with trespassing teen-agers that he had shot at them. Mrs. Songel Padgett, who was married for a year to Fred Newhall Woods, the 25-year-old suspect, said, "I would like to see him give up, turn himself in and get some help."

Mrs. Songel Padgett during interview in Atlanta.

The two were high school sweethearts at Woodside High School in Redwood City, Calif. They married in 1972, 18 months after graduation, and were divorced a year later. She said she has not seen him since then. Her last contact with Mr. Woods was a telephone conversation two years ago, in which they talked about her new marriage to a truck driver, she said in an interview. For the brief marriage the couple lived on the 100-acre Woods family estate in Portola Valley, 40 miles south of San Francisco. Mr. Woods worked in his father's rock quarry on the estate for a brief time while they were married. The kidnapped children were imprisoned underground in the same quarry.

Nervous Over Children

"He told me children made him nervous," Mrs. Padgett said. "I thought if we had a child it would help our marriage. But he didn't want one. I kind of assumed it was because of his parents. They didn't spend much time with him." Mr. Woods remodeled a schoolhouse on the family estate, working alone she said. "His friends hardly ever came by," she recalled. "He was very lonely, and it was very lonely living there. He never talked about his problems, except for the ones he had with his father."

Mr. Woods worked in his father's rock quarry on the estate for a brief time while they were married. The kidnapped children were imprisoned underground in the same quarry.

Handwriting Comparisons

That note, which also was the exchange of ransom for the victims, was being compared with samples of Mr. Wood's handwriting. Mr. Wood's father, Fred Nickerson Woods 3d, is president of the California Rock and Gravel Company of San Francisco. Among others, the company owns an Alameda County Quarry near Livermore, 100 miles northwest of Chowchilla, where the 26 children and Mr. Ray were taken in two used panel vans and confined until they were able to escape the night of July 18, digging through five feet of junk and gravel. The younger Mr. Woods, said by neighbors and acquaintances to have made a hobby of buying used vehicles, fixing them and then selling them, once worked at the quarry. He has also been identified as having purchased last Nov. 20 the trailer that was buried from a Palo Alto moving company and as having purchased the two 1971 panel trucks believed used to transport the victims at an auction of Government surplus equipment last Nov. 24 in Alameda County. Trailer's Twin owned A twin of that 25-foot-long trailer was found on the Wood's farm, along with two tractor cabs that could be used to pull such trailers. All three had been bought from the Palo Alto company. Also found in the suspect's

Wildlife Service Would Let States Trim Numbers

Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, July 24—They stroll the fairways of golf courses in Florida, sun and swim in the backyards of the new housing developments there and on occasion are seen crossing busy intersections in the hearts of cities. The American alligator has once again poked its scaly head out of the swamps. Once considered near extinction, the intrusive reptile—as evidenced by its inclination to spurn the swamps for more comfortable surroundings—has apparently made a comeback. The Fish and Wildlife Service calls the present alligator population of 650,000 a "dramatic" increase. The National Wildlife Federation, ignoring the more skeptical wildlife conservation groups who joined the Federal agency in hailing the comeback as an example of how the Federal Endangered Species Act contributes to the recovery of animal populations thought at one time to be close to extinction. "In some ways this has been a success story," a spokesman for the National Wildlife Federation said. "It demonstrates the effectiveness of the law."

The alligator was placed on the endangered species list in six southern states in 1967 when the Federal act was adopted, and according to the Fish and Wildlife Service, its population has mushroomed from the 52,000 estimated in a 1970 survey. As a result, the Federal agency has recommended shifting the alligator from an "endangered" to a "threatened" species. The former classification prohibits the harvest and interstate transportation of alligator hides, while the latter would allow individual states to determine whether or not to harvest the hides and would free them for interstate commerce.

Lewis Regenstein of the Fund for Animals, a Washington-based conservation group, questioned the Fish and Wildlife Service's motives. He charged that the proposal was not based on an accurate count of the population but rather on pressure from landfill developers and buyers that have forced the reptile from its natural habitat. However, a spokesman for the Fish and Wildlife Service's regional office in Atlanta argued that the increasing alligator population needed to be controlled. "The only problem with an alligator rolling around in your backyard and eating a $200 poodle is that it becomes not a beautiful thing of nature, a blooming nuisance," Donald W. Pitzer, the spokesman, said in a telephone interview. He said that every year up to 3,000 alligators are removed as nuisances. He reasoned that their removal could have economic advantages in the form of a "controlled harvest," after which the hides could be sold. This would be possible if the alligator were designated as a threatened species.

FOOTBALL STAR NO. 1 IN A POLL OF PUPILS

It used to be you could ask a child for his favorite hero and be reasonably sure of coming up with a President, a well-known scientist, or at least a famous fiddler or two. Not any more. A nationwide survey of some 500 pupils in the fifth through 12th grades conducted by The Ladies Home Journal turned up an odd assortment of "top 50" hero figures, including Linda Lovelace, the star of several pornographic movies, and Charles Manson, convicted mass murderer. O. J. Simpson, the football star ranked highest among both girls and boys surveyed by the magazine and headed the composite list of 50 heroes and heroines published in the Journal's August edition. Next in order in the poll were Elton John, the rock singer; Neil Armstrong, the former astronaut; John Wayne and Robert Redford, the actors; Chris Evert, the tennis player; Meryl Streep, the actress; and Billie Jean King, the tennis player.

PARAPLEGIC FREED IN NARCOTICS CASE

Judge Suspends Sentence in Interest of Mercy

By ARNOLD H. LUBASCH

A 30-year-old paraplegic who pleaded guilty to a substantial narcotics charge has received a suspended sentence from a Federal judge who said that the law should not be "remorseless, implacable and without mercy."

The judge Marvin E. Frankel, gave the suspended sentence in District Court in Manhattan last Thursday to Sylvester Mattox, a narcotics defendant who has been a paraplegic since 1971 when was injured while fleeing from kidnapers.

Mr. Mattox pleaded guilty last April to having participated in a narcotics conspiracy involving what—Judge Frankel described as "a large-scale wholesale and retail business in heroin and cocaine" in early 1971 before his injury and paralysis.

The judge observed that "the defendant was kidnapped, perhaps in connection with his criminal involvements, subject to various brutalities and finally injured desperately when he jumped from a two-story window in an effort to escape."

"Since that episode," the judge added, "he has been a paraplegic confined to a wheelchair."

15-year Maximum

Mr. Mattox could have been sentenced to a maximum of 15 years in prison on the narcotics charge and an additional one year on a tax charge, but Judge Frankel released him and put him on probation for three years.

In an eight-page opinion explaining the suspended sentence, Judge Frankel said that a prison sentence could serve the purposes of "making the defendant pay and reaffirming the community's outrage against the behavior in question."

But he said that "a society that sets an example of naked, pitiless vengeance will not promote respect for the law or compliance with the law's dictates."

"The line between sternness and cruelty cannot be seen with mathematical precision," the judge continued. "It must be espied by whatever light we can find. When the balance is uncertain, our law, like our professed morality, tells us to err on the side of mercy."

Judge Frankel, who is widely regarded as an authority on sentencing, attracted vehement criticism recently from those who said he was unduly lenient in giving a four-month sentence to Bernard Bergman, the 64-year-old nursing home figure who pleaded guilty to participating in a Medicaid fraud that allegedly involved $1.2 million.

Mr. Mattox, a Vietnam War veteran from Irvington, N. J., was described as "economically self-sustaining" because of veterans' pension funds as well as a laundromat business and some real estate that he owns.

Others Were Acquitted

While Mr. Mattox pleaded guilty, six other defendants in the same narcotics case were acquitted in a trial, Judge Frankel said, adding that Mr. Mattox was "a minor figure compared to several who have gone scot-free."

The judge noted that the Probation Department had recommended not sending Mr. Mattox to prison and that the Federal prosecutor had recommended six months as a "relatively lenient" sentence in view of the defendant's physical condition.

However, Judge Frankel said, if Mr. Mattox was "wheeled into prison" to serve a sentence, "the defendant's presence would tell his fellow inmates that the law is not merely relentless, but remorseless, implacable and without mercy."

"It may be of interest to consider this case in thinking about recurrent proposals for mandatory minimum sentences," he said, noting that a mandatory minimum could have prevented him from giving a suspended sentence to Mr. Mattox.

"Unless the power to discriminate is left somewhere, the criminal law tends to produce monstrosities," the judge said, adding: "There is a need for flexer, more uniform, more humane standards, but there will remain always a need for judgment."

France Reports Setting Off 2 Underground Atom Blasts

PARIS, July 23 (UPI)—France announced today that it exploded two underground atomic devices July 10 and 22 in its Pacific territories.

The Defense Ministry, said the tests took place on Mururoa atoll, 800 miles southeast of Tahiti. The ministry said the tests were carried out in "satisfactory conditions," but did not disclose the strength of the atomic devices. Since France halted atmospheric testing in 1974, its technicians have been trying to perfect a miniaturized hydrogen warhead and an atomic reactor.

These were the fourth and fifth underground nuclear tests to be carried out since President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing took office in 1974.

Summer in Saratoga With the City Ballet

SARATOGA, N. Y.
In the beginning, which was only 11 years ago, the theater would have many empty seats, and you could hardly give the tickets away. Saratoga was famous for Dutch elms, mineral springs and old memories, and Arabesque was probably the name of some horse. Now Saratoga has not exactly surrendered to ballet, but the seduction is advanced, and local people who might otherwise drive over to Albany to ponder the Mall frequently go to the Performing Arts Center instead. The other day, a matinee for "The Nutcracker" was sold out long before the performance, and this was striking because "Nutcracker" is supposed to be for Christmas, and where do you find enough people here to go to a matinee, anyway? Dance and Saratoga are now entwined.

The company that brought dance here, of course, is the New York City Ballet, which first showed up on July 9, 1966, to do "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and has been returning every summer since. This summer it will be here until July 31.
The company has touched Sara-

Our Museums Have Become Flooded With A Niagara of Counterfeit Art

How odd it is that so little is written about art museums—so little, I mean, about the actual experience one acquires in them, about the values they embrace, about the way they function in our culture and the way they have come to shape our thinking about art and the place it occupies, or fails to occupy, in our lives. There is probably no other institution of comparable importance in our society that has inspired so little serious thought, so little in the way of philosophical reflection, sociological analysis or critical study. The literature on the subject is so meager that it can scarcely be said to exist. More money and more people are drawn to museums than ever before in our history—and there are more museums drawing them—yet the ideas governing these remarkable institutions are seldom examined outside the board rooms or curatorial offices where decisions are made that affect our entire culture.
Everyone knows that museums have changed, but how little attention has been paid to the nature of the change. The sacred hush, the slightly churchy atmosphere, the very air that we used to breathe in the museum—compounded, it seemed, of piety and dust—are gone, but what has taken their place? Museums today are cleaner, brighter, more cheerful places than they once were, but what has happened to the objects in them, and what has happened to the way we are directed to look at them? What has happened to the way museums now educate the eye?
Go to almost any art museum today, and what is the first thing likely to engage your attention? Not, more often than not, a work of art. Either just before or just after handing over the price of admission, the museum visitor confronts the amazing cornucopia of the sales desk, often nowadays expanded into a sizable shop, where the eye is filled with a numbing abundance of what can only be called counterfeit art—posters, postcards, reproductions ("suitable for framing"), books, pamphlets, guides, souvenirs and expensive replicas of the works to be seen in the museum galleries or in some other museum's galleries. Although the whole point of going to an art museum is to see something that cannot be seen elsewhere, our attention is straightaway diverted to things that can be seen elsewhere.

"A numbing abundance of posters, postcards, reproductions, books, pamphlets, guides, souvenirs and expensive replicas are diverting attention from the experience of art."
That can be taken-home under one's arm or in one's pocket.
Thus, we come to the museum in order to see what we call—with, perhaps, too little consciousness of what the word signifies—the work of art, but what we see first is likely to be work of another kind: the work of printers, publishers and pedagogues, of designers and manufacturers, of that vast industry that services our need for information about art and for counterfeit representations of it.

I am not myself disposed to question this need, but I think it is important—and now more important than ever—to distinguish it from the primary function of the museum, which is to show us the real thing. The reasons for the existence of this vast industry in the production of secondary art experiences are neither mysterious nor reprehensible. For the public, these counterfeit materials serve, first of all, an important educational function. They impart information not otherwise easily come by. They serve, too, a kind of auxiliary esthetic function in revivifying our memory of what we have seen or in exciting our expectation about what, given the opportunity, we may expect to see. It is only when the counterfeit is mistaken for the real thing—when the work of the industry is somehow construed to be an authentic representation of the work of the artist—that this busy commerce in art souvenirs becomes worrisome. Art reproductions are, in some respects, the esthetic equivalent of pinups and pornography, and an esthetic sensibility nourished exclusively or primarily on such materials is about as much in touch with the reality of art as a mind nourished on pinups and pornography can be said to be in touch with the reality of love.
For museums, of course, this industry is a double-edged sword. Counterfeit art serves a very real purpose in a great deal of ways. It is a source of income, but in our major museums, it is derived from such sources as the sale of art, the source of self-subsidy. Thomas P. F. Hoving, the director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, once said, "I did it. It worked. Not only Morozov, but Wallace and Bobby Clark would be interested in it."

STAGE VIEW
MEL GUSSOW

The Versatility of British Actors Can Be Dazzling

Shakespeare season in England, not only at Avon, but also at Chichester, at the National Gents Park, in the West End, and at the new theater in north London. This month one could witness "Othello," Alan Badel's "Richard III," "Hamlet," and Donald Sinden's Benedick in "Much About Nothing." In common, these actors are in their roles, but age never seems to deter from challenging themselves or Shakespeare result is profitable.

McKellen's transformation between plays is so arresting—temperamentally as well as physically—that, seeing his performances on successive days, one is caught by surprise: is that really McKellen as Leontes, or has some other, older member of the Royal Shakespeare Company borrowed his name for the occasion? Then we remember McKellen's other recent performances—in Chekhov's "The Wood Demon" and, especially, last season in London in David Rudkin's "Ashes" (as a contemporary husband, desperately, humbly, eager to father a child); the actor's range is enormous. Certainly he is one of the most versatile and compelling actors of his generation.

help us to leap the steepchase jumps in character and mood. We are asked to accept Leontes's instant conversion to misanthropy—his turnabout from wise and faithful husband, friend and king, into wrathful accuser, imprisoning his wife and exiling his newly born daughter. The magical recovery of the daughter, the return to life of the wife, the generous happy ending are treated as myth—a symbolic acting out of what would be, by any realistic measure, impossible.

Perhaps my admiration for McKellen's Romeo is heightened by the fact that this was the second production of the play I saw this summer, and the first, at St. George's Theater, was woefully inadequate. St. George's is a recently converted church that resembles Shakespeare's Globe Theater. Physically, this is an impressive building, although the sightlines and acoustics are faulty. Beginning with "Twelfth Night" and "Romeo and Juliet," St. George's plans to do every play on the Shakespeare list. I hope that this "Romeo" is not typical of the company's work.

A permanent set has been installed on the broad stage, and this is the first mistake. Verona looks like a colony of small Swiss chalets, divided by shower curtains. It is impossible to tell the difference between the Montagues and the Capulets, except for the fact that the Montagues live in a chalet stage left and the Capulets live in a chalet stage right. Sarah Badel is an acceptable Juliet, but Peter McEnery is a petulant, peevish Romeo; one never has the feeling that these two are unalterably in love. The actress playing the nurse is too young and too raucous—an annoying busybody—and the actor playing Friar Lawrence makes him an inept muddler.

In contrast, the Trevor Nunn and Barry Kyle production of "Romeo and Juliet" at Stratford is polished and direct. We can feel the emotional tug between McKellen and Francesca Amnia. Despite McKellen's actual age, these are adolescents, inspired by a romantic vision and torn by parental pressure. Juliet's scenes with her father (Mr. Woodvine) have a particular urgency, as he shifts from paternal indulgence to blistering outrage. Where St. George's Friar Lawrence severed the drama, Stratford's Friar Lawrence (Mr. Waller) knits it together. Mr. Waller's well-meaning churchman is trying his mightiest to be pragmatic and moral—and is helplessly blocked by fate.

This summer's innovation at Stratford is a new quasi-permanent set by John Napier and Chris Dyer, which reuses "joists and planks" from previous productions, seems to thrust the stage further into the audience and puts part of the audience on stage in boxes behind the actors. This makes the large house seem more intimate, which is especially helpful in "Much About Nothing," clearly the crowd-pleaser of the season because of Donald Sinden.

As might be expected, Sinden, a superb clown, plays up to the audience—one could not imagine him acting in an empty theater—and it laps laughs out of his hand. His is a broad ebullient Benedick. As contrasted to Sam Waterston (the Benedick of most recent New York memory) this is an entirely different character in an extremely different play. Sinden's Benedick is no youthful ironist but a confirmed old bachelor who finally decamps from his smug existence because of flattery. His head swivels when his friends tell him that Beatrice loves him.

As director, John Barton has transplanted the play from Messina to India. Soldiers are home from battle, and, immediately, we feel the heat, see the servitude of the colonials, and anticipate the decline of the Empire. Dogberry has been conceived of as a bumbling, word-crunching Indian—Gunga Din as played by Peter Sellers (actually he is John Woodvine in disguise). The notion is interesting, probably more so for the English, but the performances, except for Sinden's and Woodvine's, are pallid. For example, the actors playing the headstrong Claudio and the machinating Don Pedro seem interchangeable (what we miss most from the recent New York production is Douglass Watson's urbane Don Pedro). Even Judi Dench as Beatrice is no match for this Benedick. With winks, nods, double-takes and asides to the audience, Sinden makes "Much About Nothing" into a graceful one-man comic joust—"Much About Sinden."

Sinden conquers Benedick, but back in London at the National Theater, Albert Finney is vanquished by Hamlet. This should have been an exciting performance (one thinks of his "Luther" and "Tom Jones"), but, somehow, it seems half-hearted, as if the actor's mind were elsewhere—perhaps on Marlowe's "Tamburlaine," which he is scheduled to do in the fall for Peter Hall. As Hamlet, he lacks liveness, physically and emotionally, arbitrarily hurdling through some soliloquies, blurring the language, and offering no indication of a concept. Somewhere in Peter Hall's weighty production, there must be a purpose other than to present a leading actor in an uncut "Hamlet" in the nation's first theater. Perhaps the director and the actor envision a commoner prince. If so, the vision has not been realized. Watching Finney, we recall Nicol Williamson's "Hamlet," which brought the Dane down to earth without devaluing Shakespeare.

film "Gator" opposite Burt Reynolds. Not bad for a man who began acting at the age of 10 and spent the next 40 years playing a succession of largely minor character parts. Surely all this newfound celebrity must be bringing him a great deal of satisfaction.

"Well, I'll tell you," said the Los Angeles-based actor one recent afternoon. Weston was relaxing in the elegantly furnished living room of the East Side apartment he is sharing with his wife, actress Marge Redmond. "Marge said, 'Wouldn't it be terrific if we were 25, just starting out, and all this happened? To get those reviews when you're young? And I thought, no, it's marvelous now. How terrific that a middle-aged, rotund, Jewish guy can reach a point in his career when someone finally says, 'You were great.' I know this sounds corny, but it's such a beautiful payoff to 40 years of putting in your time."

Weston—dressed California-style in blue checked shirt, white slacks and white patent leather loafers—spoke with the funny lisp and Midwestern vowels that complement his comic persona. Gentle brown eyes, set in a cherubic bulldog face, glowed whenever he broached a subject close to his heart. One such subject was Neil Simon and his new play.

"You remember the last sketch?" Weston asked, referring to the playlet about a Fourth of July brawl between two "best friend" couples who have spent a little too much of their vacation together. "I was sent the script when I was down in Georgia shooting 'Gator.' I stayed up all night in my hotel room reading the play. I fell off the bed laughing. When I got to the line about all the physical injuries these friends had inflicted on each other—Jesus, it's like Guadalcanal!" I said, "I'm gonna do this play. I just want to say that line on the American stage. Guadalcanal—you get this picture of two soldiers carrying bodies off a battlefield. Only Neil Simon writes like that."

In both "Winter's Tale" and "Romeo and Juliet," he has been surrounded by excellent, supportive players (particularly John Woodvine, David Waller and Barbara Leigh-Hunt).

As co-directors, John Barton and Trevor Nunn seem to regard "Winter's Tale" as a folk tale, a child's-eye view of a paradoxical adult world. The simplicity and innocence then a line, that releases all the tension. Like at the end of the second play, when Marvin the businessman and his wife get back together after she finds the hooker in his bed—there's a kind of clumsy poignancy to the whole thing. And that is life."

From behind his tinted glasses, Weston reflected on the more serious undertones of Simon's work. "Martin Gottfried wrote that there was a beautiful man-child quality to Marvin, which is also there in the lead character in Simon's 'Last of the Red Hot Lovers.' Morton Middleclass—Ronald Rotarian—what makes him do what he does? What makes him want to have a fling? Why is he afraid of living—and dying? People identify with this character. Women walk up to me and say, 'When you get out of that bed and go to the bathroom, that's my husband! That's the way he looks.' It's a gift to be able to write characters like that. I'd love Neil to write a play—not just a one-actor, but something deeper—about this character. The definitive play on the middle-class American male."

For Simon, Weston and director Gene Saks "That second sketch was created totally through collaboration." Weston said, the middle-class American male is something of a clown, and it takes a clown to play him. "I didn't have any particular model in mind when I worked on the part of Marvin. I just lent myself to it—I'm Russian-Jewish, and I suffer. When we were working together on Maria Irene Fornes's play 'The Office,' Elaine May said, 'You have a cloud, Jack, that follows you wherever you walk.' "I have always been a great admirer of Bert Lahr," Weston continued. "He was my idol—a physical comic who could communicate so much through his face, his eyes, the curl of his lip, the way he used his hands. Zero Mostel, too, and James Coco and the

by my fellow actors. We all get along very well in 'California Suite,' thank goodness. If we didn't, I don't think I could stay on."

If Weston is a devotee of the comedy of hard knocks, it might be because he suffered more than a few of them growing up. He says he always loved acting, but "wasn't what you'd call your matinee idol, cosmetically speaking." Born in Cleveland, the son of a shoe repairman, he remembers the days when his father brought home $10 a week and the family was on Home Relief. "During the Depression, my brother and I used to go to the movies to escape a miserable, boring existence. I was hypnotized by those shadows on the screen. I identified with the character actors—Wallace Beery, Eugene Pallette, Edward Arnold, Frank Morgan. You'd see a Clark Gable once or twice a year, but the character actors were always there, like glue holding the films together."

Weston was something of a character himself in public school, and one of his teachers convinced his father that there might be some talent beneath the cutting up. Morris Weinstein—"I think he had a deep artistic bent, and he gave me a lot of encouragement"—took his 10-year-old son to the Cleveland Playhouse for an apprenticeship that was cut short in his late teens when the Army beckoned. After World War II, Weston came to New York to study at the American Theatre Wing on the GI Bill, holding down odd jobs, making the rounds, and eventually landing featured parts in Broadway plays of the '50s, including the 1956 musical, "Bells Are Ringing," in which his wife, Marge, was standby for Judy Holliday. Weston also worked in television in New York, on such shows as the Philco Playhouse. But "TV in New York seemed to be falling apart. In Los Angeles, it was blossoming." So the Westons quit "Bells Are Ringing" and took off for the coast in their new Volkswagen, which crashed on a route, turning over three times but somehow leaving Marge and Jack intact. "We flipped a coin to see if we should go on to Hollywood. Two out of three, it came up that we should. So we boarded a plane and went."

"I need to be liked. I'm the king of paranoia. If people look at me cross-eyed, I get nervous—I have to be liked. Not only by the audience, but

The Westons' flip of a coin, resulted in numerous television roles for Jack in "Gunsmoke," "The Untouchables" and "Twilight Zone." His film debut in "Please Don't Eat the Daisies" in 1960 was followed by small but featured parts in such films as "The April Fools" with Jack Lemmon, Elaine May's "A New Leaf" and "Cactus Flower" with Ingrid Bergman. "All those years watching Ingrid Bergman, then arriving on the set to work with her for 12 weeks. I trembled!"

Weston might have been consigned to a career of being a familiar but unidentifiable face on the wide small screens had it not been for playwright Terrence McNally, a longtime fan who insisted that Weston be cast as Gaetano Proclo, the good-natured nebbish of a sanitationman who unknowingly flees to a homosexual bathhouse to escape his murderous brother-in-law in "The Ritz." "You seldom get the part you played on stage in the movie, too," Weston beamed, "but Terrence stuck with me all the way."

How long will he be staying on with "California Suite"? "Until it's not working for me anymore. It's tough physically doing the show—you start high, and have to get higher. I don't want to get bored with the part—it would hurt the play, and myself, to cross that fine line between acting and being blasé, and start to invent shit. If the audience doesn't believe what I'm doing, doesn't believe in Marvin's fear, for example, then the play is out the window. You have to keep your performance on that straight line that the playwright intended."

"When you reach a top of sorts," Weston concluded, leaning back in his chair, trying, as he said, not to be sentimental, "when reviews like these come out, you want to turn to the person who encouraged you to do it all. My father never saw me act—he died when I was 14, hit by a truck. But I was thinking the other day as I was walking home from the theater—if only he could be here to see it. I wanted to say, look, I did it. It worked. It happened." Not only Morris Weinstein, but Wallace Beery and Bobby Clark would be proud.

Dear Universal Studios:
I recently starred in Paramount's "Bad News Bears", when I came to Calif. to play in the Bingo Long vs. Bad News Bears game, you had a private screening of Bingo Long for us, I thought it was the best movie I've ever seen, it was twice as good as Bad News Bears. The way it moved from funny to serious and sometimes even sad, was great.
If any movie is ever as good as The Bears in my book it's Bingo Long.

DANCE VIEW

The Critic's
'Terrible Power' Over Institutions

more damaging than the critic who attaches himself to a cultural institution and becomes, in effect, its public relations spokesman. He loses credibility, and even the organization suffers from a damp swamp of overpraise. On the other hand, the critic needs to establish a climate where something can grow. He must not be kind, but also he must not be unduly rigorous. In fact, he must be realistic.

Say, for a moment, you are a dance critic in South Dakota. And someone has formed, nervously, tentatively and lovingly, a new, professional dance company. Now it would be perfectly possible to destroy this company by unencouragement. It would also be perfectly possible to destroy this company by overencouragement. To achieve the first you have to point out at length it is not as good as New York City Ballet, which shows you are stupid-sophisticated, and to achieve the second you have to suggest that it is better than New York City Ballet, which makes you sophisticated-stupid. In both instances the critic is irrelevant and unhelpful.

We have seen the same thing happen in New York. For the most part critics have taken a responsible attitude toward New York City Ballet, and perhaps the City Center Joffrey Ballet. The modern-dance companies have been dealt with fairly fairly, with some decent appreciation of their possibilities and potentialities. But American Ballet Theater has had, over the past three decades or so, a fairly rough time. And when we look at theater and opera, there seems to have been a lack of respect for aspiration in connection with future achievement. Look at the way, for example, the New York critics, especially the self-appointed highbrows, treated Jules Irving's regime at Lincoln Center's Vivian Beaumont Theater. It was ignorant and appalling. Consider the way Joseph Papp's New York Shakespeare Festival is considered in bits, rather than a theater that has an overall plan, a total commitment to its community, and the hope of being a national theater. Its obvious successes are lauded, its dismal failures are deplored, and its experiments are generally misunderstood. Few critics take into account what Papp is trying to do as a whole.

What I would like to suggest to critics is that they look at the overall pattern of an institutional group. Because of our lack of princes and their courts, we in America are having to build our institutions the hard way. Generosity is called for. This does not mean that critics should overpraise. Simply what it means is that critics should be loving toward the inherent possibilities of their own cultural community. They are part of it. They are not living in ivory towers, they are people of the plains. They talk to the public.

The institutions themselves do not need an easy review. Indeed, the more serious an institution is, probably the more stringent the review should be. But even a bad review—the worst review you can envisage—can be sympathetic. The critic needs to be free, maverick and honest. But he must not wilfully destroy the plaintive flowers of aspiration. He doesn't have to be easy, but he doesn't have to be cutting. It is easy to be funny at the expense of the unweaned. Anyone can be a Claudia Cassidy in Chicago. A critic has to wonder whether it is really in the best interests of his hopes.

these are not real fortes?" Or articulation of rhythmic figures: "Steve, do you have any impulse to hold on to your tied note a little bit longer?"

Marlboro does not altogether escape the pressures of time and tension that are endemic to the music business but the fact that it does at all is what brings musicians back here year after year. "I find playing in the same ensemble restrictive after a while," says Cohen. "I find I want to be exposed to different ideas, a different repertoire, and the stimulation that comes from both the older and younger people here. There is also a consideration for family that is atypical of other schools and festivals."

"I'm incredibly happy here," says violinist Young-Uck Kim. "During the winter, I work alone. I sit in airport lounges, take a plane somewhere, check into a hotel, practice, sleep and go to rehearsal. The conductor is busy. I talk to him for 20 minutes and he tells me what tempi he takes. It's happened that I didn't see the conductor at all before a performance. Here, you can discuss ideas at breakfast, dinner, all the time. You can renew friendships with people who you don't see because everyone travels so much. It's a very secure feeling."

Orchestra musicians like Jerusalem Symphony clarinetist Eli Eben come here to refresh. "In an orchestra situation, not all 100 members are prepared each day and your conductor is not always inspiring," he says. "Players tend to be a bit mercenary; they won't put in the work on chamber music unless they have concerts booked. When I'm going through a dry period there, I think: how would I approach this at Marlboro?"

Implicit in any reference to Marlboro is, of course, Rudolf Serkin who takes pains to discourage a personality cult but seems to inspire by mere proximity. Musicians note that while Serkin has been ill and should be slowing down, he actually works harder than most at his music, is in on the wildest pranks, knows every detail and difficulty on campus, and negotiates potentially explosive conflicts with routine aplomb.

"He is unquestionably a great man," says a long-time participant, "and yet he would never give a master class or conduct the orchestra here. At the same time he is very shrewd, ambitious and will not relinquish the slightest amount of authority while wanting to convince others that he is perfectly self-effacing. But he sees through himself as well as through everyone else."

"He knows the necessity of constant change," says Luis Battle. "He's always looking for ways to disturb the equilibrium so things won't stagnate."

In fact, Serkin is spending a great deal of time these days thinking about the future. "Where do we go from here?" he asks, in a rare moment alone. "This is very much on my mind because I know nothing ever remains the same, and I'm kind of curious. Marlboro started really by accident. Then people began coming here looking for something they had missed. I don't think there was ever a great musician—like Joachim, Schnabel, Casals or Horowitz—who did not play chamber music."

"The landscape here, the place, brings out the generosity that is in every human being, even if you have to scratch a little sometimes to find it. This community educates one. We once had a virtuoso violinist here who was very arrogant, who didn't even want to help in the dining room. So without any plan or agreement, no one served him. He had to serve himself, and after 10 days here, he was fine. "This is a place to learn how to play second fiddle. A lot of people know how to play first. But to play second well and beautifully is a great art."

Hans Werner Henze

Henze's First

times into passages worthy of Mr. Henze at his best. The madmen have a good bit of quasi-improvisatory choral moaning; the percussionist has his most extended solos; the emperor (Josephine Veasey) croons to neo-Javanese gamelan accompaniment; and the victims sing their somewhat anti-climactic choral apotheosis. Mr. Henze's gifts for the delicately judged effect, particularly when he works with exotic instrumental color, remain unimpaired. Certainly Covent Garden gave the composer its all. David Atherton, the conductor, held things together admirably, and the huge cast of singers, instrumentalists and actor, headed by Norman Welsby, Robert Tear, Michael Langdon, Gary Kettel (the percussionist), Josephine Barstow, Mahmud Hekic, Valerie Masterson and Miss Veasey, was superb.

But ultimately it appears a questionable endeavor, at least after a single hearing. Mr. Henze is, without any doubt at all, a composer of enormous potential, but age 50 seems the time for accomplishment. It is beside the point to snipe, as so many have done, at the sincerity of his politics. What counts is whether he makes convincing music, and that he hasn't done—either in the past or in "We Come to the River."

TURN IT UP.

Don't buy any loudspeaker until you test drive it. You're not going to a recital. You're choosing a roommate.

Challenge it. Put it through its paces. Most loudspeakers can handle mid-range, mid-volume, mid-mid sound. That's no test.

Turn it up! Really loud. Loud loud. Kid-next-door loud.

How does the loudspeaker sound? Do you like it? Is it clean? Is it clear? Does it hum? Does it splatter? Is it fuzzy or distorted?

Loudness magnifies the imperfections that will scar your subconscious at regular listening levels; Loudness tells you what time will do to your ears, your head, your disposition. Now:

TURN IT DOWN.

Way down. Take it to the edge of silence and then come back a little.

Can you hear every part of the music? Are all the textures and detail and harmony of the music still there, or is only the melody lingering on?

Nobody wants to live with a loudspeaker that can't make its point unless it yells. So Turn it down.

One last thought: You shouldn't have judge a loudspeaker while you're listening three other speakers, six other conversations and a partridge in a pear tree.

If you're serious about sound, find someone who's serious about helping you. Find a dealer with proper demonstration facilities. That's easy.

If it says "Authorized JBL Dealer," relax. You've come to the right place.

JBL offers a number of different high fidelity loudspeakers from $168 to $3510. Shown here, from left, are L36, L166 and L300. They are priced at $225, $399 and $960 each.

The Networks
Nervous

There must have been some nervousness during the Democratic Convention in the command mode of the networks, those glowing bubbles in the sky. The conspiracy against television had on a new form. This form was the short-notice keynote speakers, Senator John Chafee and Barbara Jordan, were introduced, of course, as the designated President, there was a silly 16 minutes of Edward G. Robinson's Mr. Dooley. That's all. The movies left almost everything to be done by commercials for the self, and not very well. The point is that when they were in Madison Square Garden were turned on, as were helpless. All those electronic floor cadets with their Captain Video heads in the Winter Palace of Amy Carter's ennui, isenfranchised, unplugged and de-bugged, in order to interrupt the business of the as long as the movies chose to run, there is the frustration, the panic, in Kandahar learn this lesson and act accordingly: the nominating and seconding speeches in uniform debate? Why not a visual essay on the made: clips of an unflinching President of the Mayaguez crisis, facing down the hoodlums; home movies of Julie Eisenhower in Connally being acquitted and Nelson Rockefeller ten thousands of his most faithful remain, in a bomb shelter underneath the could hold their entire convention in the ring the hated networks speechless. It has not been nervousness. In fact, there is a transcendently nervous empire, other reaches of its news, public affairs divisions. Talk about Fritz Mondale's diabolical commitment to these money-losing lobed village is a wayward thing: What is your prestige lately? It is, like advertising, engineering, and therefore fearful. (One's better "Kojak" episodes wrapped up in a single package. A female film producer her first TV commercial, witnesses she is persecuted. At the end of an hour of her gobbling pills as though they were jujubes, I had a cramp in my brain.) The nominating conventions are, obviously, the Olympics of electronic journalism. But at least the competitors have been there before. One needn't be an adept in any extrasensory voodoo to imagine the pressure on the provincials in the qualifying heats: the producer who has worked for six months on an hour-long documentary, and has to wait another three for a time-slot; the independent production company petitioning a network for acceptance; the freelance working temporarily for one of the TV "news magazines." There is a skin of ego easily bruised, an electronic sweat, the anxiety of being marginal. These maulings were inspired by telephone calls, a recent cluster of them like the burst of a Gatling gun. The job of a freelance was on the line because of a newspaper review suggesting that he had improperly sprung an on-camera surprise while interviewing someone for a documentary segment. The head of an independent production company mobilized a battalion of public relations agents to explain himself. Another independent virtually begged for the critical attention that a network wasn't paying him. A network producer raged at an article that divided the credit for a program when the credit should have been individual and indivisible, even though the article had rhapsodized about the program. Another independent producer called plaintively to disagree with one's mild reservations about her latest efforts. Embarrassing, as is usual with telephone conversations. What do you say to someone who has called to declare that he or she rather more appreciates what he or she has done than you did? You mumble, and your diastolic pressure shoots for the moon. And your anxiety is a midget compared to theirs. Eight years ago I interviewed a network TV executive, having been told that he was guaranteed to say something appalling and quotable. He did, I quoted. He called the next day to say, "You made me look like a horse's [bleep]." No; God did. He promised that I would never again be invited to any CBS parties, I thought I would survive. Amazingly, I went on for the next eight years to write about television and go to CBS parties. Equally amazingly, he became more important than Barbara Walters. Is the telephone a kind of pep pill? If so, it also sobers. TV reviewers tend to think of themselves as peripheral, even irrelevant, powerless to alter events or cloud men's minds. By the time our comment appears in print, the object of it will usually have vanished or, if it persists, millions of other people will have seen it and already made up their own minds. We are read, if at all, by those seeking a confirmation, either of their own gut reaction to a new program or of their suspicion that we are jerks. That we can't change the world is partially compensated for by the feeling that we don't hurt anybody, either. Out of our imperial idleness comes merely chat, no more compelling than the opinion of the next lout on the next barstool. To be taken seriously by those for whom a license renewal is a permit for printing money—television is recession-proof; no matter what the networks do, profits go up—is to realize just how insecure the industry is. They are scared, and that's scary, because the first victim of any such frightful stampede toward caution is the controversial program in news, public affairs and documentaries. The next victim is the public, whose sloth will go unpunished, whose slumber will be dreamless. I'm sorry, but we think about television because it is there—it is, in fact, most of our "there"—and opinion isn't a nurse.

JOHN J. O'CONNOR

The Tedium of Gavel-to-Gavel Coverage

If nothing else, television coverage of the Democratic National Convention was not skimpy. In Manhattan, at least, insatiable convention buffs had between 10 and 14 hours a day available for gluttonous consumption. Also in Manhattan, some viewers had access to two forms of coverage representing ultimate extremes. Network coverage, available to anyone with a TV set, offered a tightly structured package of live events, special features, commentaries and commercials, all brought to the nation at a cost of millions of dollars. Alternate video coverage by a group called Image Union, available only to subscribers of Manhattan Cable, was completely unstructured, sometimes meandering into pointless and irritating corners, but often tripping into moments of brilliance. Its budget was obviously in the shoestring category. Both of these extremes are legitimate and justifiable within the broad context of what is referred to, with or without irony, as "electronic communications." The problem, however, is a curious neglect of coverage that would fall between these two points, particularly at the dead center of the convention itself. The network productions too often dabble only in impressions of a convention, eliminating any material that their news producers deem minor or boring. Instead, the audience is "entertained," supposedly, with the observations of anchor-men, the interviews of floor reporters and the insights of special commentators. These contributions can be valuable, and probably would be quite effective in a limited format. But stretched over the long hours of a typical convention, they tend to be fatally flattened by inevitable repetition and tedium.

One normally perceptive observer of TV was insisting, on a cable channel, that he detected significant differences between the techniques and styles of NBC and CBS, which were offering gavel-to-gavel coverage. Comparing CBS with The New York Times, he saw NBC as The Daily News. Perhaps watching TV for long stretches can temporarily impair one's perceptions. In fact, any differences between the two networks were entirely superficial, rooted in the personalities of on-air talent. Overall content was remarkably similar—the same highlights, the same interviews, the same questions and the same answers. Basic coverage was being offered in duplicate, even in triplicate. The "edited" coverage provided by ABC was merely more of the same in a smaller time frame.

The viewer, then, is left not only with impressions of the convention, but, equally important for TV executives, with impressions of the reporters. It becomes significant that the NBC team of John Chancellor and David Brinkley worked exceptionally well together, combining an intelligent presentation of factual information with easy humor and occasional bite. It is unsettling to find Bill Moyers, formerly a kingpin in public-TV, reduced to a bit part on the CBS network, confronting and sometimes sharply debating Eric Sevareid at the special-commentary table.

And it is astonishing to witness the apothecosis of Walter Cronkite from news anchorman to elder statesman. Normally alone on the TV screen, Mr. Cronkite was joined several times by prominent political personalities for "exclusive" interviews. Jimmy Carter's mother, the delightful Miss Lillian, was going to join him at one point as a co-anchorperson, but that plan was wisely vetoed by the Carter staff. The power of a Walter Cronkite was apparent. "You don't have to be a President of the United States to make a difference in this country," Teddy Kennedy told Mr. Cronkite. "You don't even have to be a Congressman," he said, adding with gentle admiration, "You make a difference, Mr. Cronkite."

Fortunately, Mr. Cronkite himself is a level-headed sort, unlikely to lose his perspective in the surrounding sea of homage. Like most of the top-echelon newsmen in TV, the CBS anchorman usually soothes and comforts, rarely disturbs his audience. The infrequent eruptions of annoying behavior are left to lower-echelon reporters. This time around, the award for seeming arrogance in the course of aggressive but not especially productive journalism would have to go to NBC's Tom Pettit. For whatever reasons, that reporter's usually wry and impressive style too often turned into a routine bordering on downright snottiness, a quality some observers mistake for superior insights.

The same quality was prominent throughout much of "The Five-Day Bicycle Race," the name of the cable production thrown together by a diverse group of video people collectively known as the Image Union. Centered in a small studio, the group offered five hours of coverage of its own members, who accepted telephone calls from viewers and presented a series of video tapes, most of which were at that moment being brought in from the convention and related points around town. The pace was casual. The content was generally what used to be called "counter culture," ranging from interviews with prostitutes to a fascinating contraband tape of Richard M. Nixon in the final moments before he delivered his Presidential resignation speech.

If the format was unstructured, the content was inevitably uneven, at its best with a minimum of editorializing. An interview with Jimmy Carter's youngest son, who seems to have been carefully kept out of the Governor's limelight, was extremely good because he was allowed to express himself easily and freely. His friendly openness came across as quite appealing. On the other hand, a comedy routine involving what was supposed to be Jimmy Carter's hometown preacher was sophomoric and insulting.

A few of the video people indulged openly in prejudices equally as obnoxious as any to be found in the "establishment" they hold in contempt. The most prominent of these seemed to be directed against all forms of middle or old age. Another was against any group that might appear well-scrubbed and conventionally well-dressed.

Even, annoying, intriguing, often terrific—"The Five-Day Bicycle Race" provided a significant contribution to convention coverage, and at a cost amounting to an infinitesimal fraction of network budgets. The concept deserves and even demands a place in the future coverage of political conventions. But, once again, effort should be made to fill the large coverage gap between network slickness and video experimentation. The convention itself must be allowed a total TV picture. The politicians should stop worrying about prime time exposure and allow the conventions to return to an unlimited amount of debating, to the silly demonstrations and important platforms for dissent—in effect, to the traditional stuff of conventions. Perhaps the virtually unfettered spectacle could be carried on public television. The networks, meanwhile, might devise truly alternative programming that would downplay entertainment values and self-serving promotion in favor of more comprehensive and incisive analyses of basic issues. The task may indeed prove difficult or impossible. But the current barrage of coverage in triplicate is largely proving to be a monumental waste of time and money.

much money as I did in summer stock last year." The part is also a reversal of the original production of the Kaufman-Hart comedy. In this revival, Miss Goodman has the husband's lines, and James Coco speaks the acerbic dialogue originally given to the wife. "That was Jimmy's idea," Miss Goodman said. "He got permission from Moss Hart's widow, Kitty Carlisle, and Kaufman's daughter, Anne. This is the way the movie was done, with Jack Benny and Ann Sheridan in 1942. Originally, the wife was kind of a 'Maude' character, very sharp, wisecracking all the time, and I'm not like that at all."

Up close, over lunch at Stockbridge, Miss Goodman transmits more than just a professional parallel to the characters she plays—especially to Martha Shumway. Beyond the physical similarities—the tangerine-colored hair ("Would it sound vain to say I touch it up?") and the rubber-faced animation—they both share that air of constant concern and confusion, accentuated by that Goodman trademark, her high-pitched anguished voice. "Ye-ss," she admitted, "Martha and I are alike in many ways, though I hope I'm not as silly as she. Every part an actress plays, even Lady Macbeth, is embellished by who they are. I know my voice sounds unusual. Even when I laugh I sound as if I'm in pain. I have such strange speech mannerisms. I stretch and bend certain words. But that's not an affectation. I didn't learn to talk like this, really I didn't." It was the Goodman speech mannerisms that led to her career as an actress. She came to New York from Columbus, Ohio, to be a classical dancer. After landing a part-time job with the corps de ballet at Radio City Music Hall, she danced in the chorus of "High Button Shoes" and "Call Me Madam." Later, she appeared in a Dallas production of "Wonderful Town" with Imogene Coco, and it was Miss Coco who persuaded her to put her toe shoes aside and take up comedy acting. "I used to recite poems and tell funny stories backstage, and Imogene liked them. When we returned to New York she introduced me to Julius Monk. Then I started to do sketches on the Sid Caesar and Martha Raye TV shows." She also starred in Ben Bagley's "Shoestring Revue," with Bea Arthur, Chita Rivera and Paul Lynde, which brought her to the attention of Jack Paar. "I auditioned for Jack and he thought I was perfect for his show. He is a very sweet man, and also very sensitive."

It was Paar's sensitivity that led to their widely publicized feud. "Oh I don't know if it was a feud. We never spoke. I was told by the producer that I wasn't to appear as often. I'm not sure if Jack felt I was hoggin' the show. I think he objected to some of the things I said. Once I laughed out loud about his toupee, and another time I told him his fly was open. In those days that was considered verry dirty talk." When Paar and Miss Goodman finally parted in 1962, she continued to work in regional theater and on Broadway. "The parts were small but I had to work to support myself. I did some flops ["Rainy Day in Newark" and "My Daughter, Your Son"], and some medium-sized hits ["The Front Page" and "Lorelei"]. I also wrote a play, "Morning in a Funny Hat," which Shirley Booth played in stock. The 60's were marvelous learning years for me. I learned how to act, in comedies of course. But even within that framework there are serious moments, moments that are human and tender, and that contrast is very satisfying to me. The difference between doing this play and 'Mary Hartman' is that the laughs are immediate in 'George Washington Slept Here.' With 'Mary Hartman,' we all play it serious. We never try for laughs, everything is done tragically; and then it takes months of waiting for ratings and letters before you know if you're pleasing the audience, and whether they love you or hate you." Dody accepted the role of Martha Shumway with "repetition" after meeting with Norman Lear, producer of "Mary Hartman," in 1974. "The pilot was so far out, it was too good to believe that anyone would like it, let alone buy it. But they did, and suddenly all our lives were changed. I can't account for the enormous popularity of the show. Certainly it's influenced the other soaps. Yesterday I was watching 'All My Children,' and they had this girl, a prosti-tute, who was beaten up and left by the side of the road by her pimp. Isn't that a little daring for afternoon television? Think of the children who could be watching. Could they possibly understand?

As if on cue, Dody is interrupted by a 6-year-old boy, standing by her table, requesting an autograph and news of her TV father, the Choctaw Indian, who on a recent episode of "Mary Hartman" left her stranded in the ladies room of a bus station. "Oh dear," she tells the boy, "I don't know what happened to him. He took off with the Apaches, perhaps." The little boy settled for an autograph, and Miss Goodman went on to insist that she hasn't a clue as to what will happen next season. "None of us knows. We go back shooting the end of August, and until then we won't see any scripts. I understand they've hired some new writers, so it'll be exciting to learn what new calamities they bring in."

"We were all tired and very frazzled when shooting stopped in June," she continued. "We were working five days a week, from 8:30 in the morning until late evening, and Louise Lasser was on call practically every day. She's the star of the show you know, she carries the ratings. Of course, all of us would like to have more to do. I've often felt that too much of my time was spent in story exposition, but the other actors feel the same way. Actually, if you want an accurate picture of the cast, we're a family, and tell me what family doesn't have its fights and disagreements? Yet everyone is a professional. Louise will often ask me to deliver a line a certain way, to get the proper set-up for her laugh, and I'll do it gladly, because she always extends the same consideration to me."

Has Miss Goodman's comeback on "Mary Hartman" led to other TV offers, possibly her own series? "I could fib to you and say I've been bombarded with offers," she said, "but I haven't been. Nothing has come in, not even a new TV commercial. Maybe they think I'm too busy. But the secret for survival in this business is to keep working, to think positive, and to have patience. Then you'll accomplish everything. Like Martha, I firmly believe all our tomorrows will be brighter. If you give them a little push, in the right eye-rection."

Splendor Overcomes Snafu In Battery Park City

A lot has happened in the ten years since Battery Park City was conceived as a new mixed-use community and kicked off into the Hudson River. Most notably, the sky fell in on New York, and Battery Park City didn't get built. But if that sounds like the end of the story, it's not. As things go in this city, it may only be the beginning.

New York is supposed to thrive on adversity, and adversity is one thing Battery Park City has had plenty of. Conceived by then-Governor Nelson Rockefeller in one of his Baron Haussmann moods, the project was to be built in Lower Manhattan on landfill in the Hudson, made in part from the World Trade Center excavation. To be initially financed by state bonds, it soon became the embattled child of city and state, presided over by the Battery Park City Authority, under Charles J. Urstadt.

The history of Battery Park City's planning, design and financing is a star-crossed study in how things can be done wrong, or go wrong, in a city where the grand snafu is a familiar way of life.

The virtually stillborn plan, hopeless in its banality, was rescued at least twice by consultant architectural midwifery and revised substantially by the city's urban design prodding. While a running design battle continued, the project's developers backed and filled, the office building market collapsed, inflation pushed costs sky high, and even the Authority's eminently marketable bonds became untouchable as moral obligation funding went under in the city and state's financial crisis. At the moment, grass is growing on 100 acres of completed, but empty landfill.

And so this may seem an odd time to announce that the plan for Battery Park City has come from a near-total lack of architectural and planning distinction to an exemplary state of design. Now that the project is bucking both the money market and the Emergency Financial Control Board, it has finally developed a concept that would add immeasurable benefit and amenity to New York. Today Battery Park City is not only worth investing in; it is worth fighting for.

To backtrack a bit, Battery Park City originally planned to erect large office towers at the southern tip of the landfill, just off the Battery, and to use the income from this commercial construction to build housing, shopping and community facilities. (Land preparation, services and open space were to be paid for by Authority bonds.) This southern point is still one of the superb sites of the world for the right builder.

But when an overbuilt commercial market made that tack impossible, the Authority turned to state-aid housing for the first phase of the plan. What ensued was a waltz with developers Samuel Lefrak and Fisher Brothers out of which little came but controversy. Although Mr. Lefrak is known as a housing developer of large projects, he is not known as an architectural overachiever. He and his architects pushed for cookie-cutter conformity.

Eventually, Mr. Lefrak's architects were absorbed into the Authority's design team, headed by consultant Max Abramovitz of Harrison and Abramovitz. Mr. Abramovitz clustered the buildings in "pods," or neighborhood groups, using platform bases to conceal underground parking and to create pedestrian and vehicular separation.

Lower buildings joined the towers for variety of scale and housing options. And Lawrence Halprin and Associates was called in to work with the architects in the integrated design of the open space.

It is the way this open space is handled that has brought about the miraculous transformation of Battery Park City from a wasteland to a place any lucky New Yorker would want to live. Except for the "view corridors" to the river that New York City's planners insisted on, the spaces were desolate. The change is in how the buildings are related to each other and to the waterfront, in the attractive landscaping and design techniques used to define public, private and transitional areas, in the character they are given and the pleasures they provide. There are places for repose, recreation, circulation and continuous visual delight.

What has finally been clearly understood and dealt with is the quality of urban life and how it can be created through urban design. (New York has been acquiring a significant number of small doses of this kind of essential environmental amenity in the plazas, through-block passages and bits and pieces of usable open space that have resulted from its innovative zoning. I submit that while there is a long way to go, and vast, impacted areas have not been touched, the city is becoming a more physically agreeable place.)

Plans are complete for the first of Battery Park City's neighborhood units, which will consist of 1,642 apartments for about 5,000 people. The foundations have been constructed for three 34-story towers and three low buildings that are six, seven and eight stories high. Financing is being sought now.

To help find that financing at a time when money is almost impossible to get, the Authority has made an application to the Federal Department of Housing and Urban Development for mortgage insurance. With that guarantee in hand, and with the help of the state's programs, it hopes to get the rest of the funding. The future hangs perilously on HUD's action now.

Even at $130 (currently) a room, there should be a stampede for these apartments. The drama and beauty of the Lower Manhattan waterfront is incomparable, and some of the planned features surpass Waterside and Roosevelt Island, both of which have set new standards for New York. (Another New York characteristic is that no one believes that anything better can ever be done, and when it is done, over formidable obstacles, it is promptly taken for granted.)

The current design for the buildings of Battery Park City is credited to Mr. Abramovitz with Jack Brown and Irving Gershon. Strikingly different from earlier versions, they make a real try for variety of form and apartment layout. The completion of these units would, in turn, make possible the construction of subsidized, less expensive housing that is projected to the north.

This first neighborhood unit is grouped around a central space about the size of Waterside or Gramercy Park. It will be reached by a pedestrian bridge from Liberty Street, over the West Side highway. The bridge will join a north-south pedestrian spine that is a shopping street. Automobiles are to be routed to streets and parking below.

This shopping street becomes the highest of five pedestrian levels leading down to the river. These levels tie together a variety of public and private spaces. The public spaces will flow around the housing and along the shopping street to a generous park that gradually steps down (there is an outdoor elevator for the handicapped) across platforms and pools, to a terraced promenade, plaza and seating at the river's edge. The public waterfront esplanade will run the entire length of the landfill.

The houses are arranged to enclose another kind of park—a semi-public green space for the use of the residents of the surrounding buildings. The town houses are to have private yards. When levels change, play space is included on landscaped roofs. There is an organic and functional rationale for everything, and "keep out" is only a subtle shift of use and location. The public areas will be the largest, with the liveliest facilities.

The major part of the cost of all this outdoor amenity will be paid for by Authority bonds; one point in favor of a development agency is that a private builder can rarely afford such special features. There will be a range of experiences from community activity to serene privacy, and for all, dramatic riverfront walks and spectacular water views.

Landscape architect Lawrence Halprin calls the plan a "vertical greenbelt town." As designed now, New York cannot afford to lose it. Battery Park City has finally come out like a rose.

The Biennale—A Show of Compromises

By PAUL OVERY

VENICE Postponed for a month due to the Italian elections, the Venice Biennale opened last Sunday—the first Biennale since political demonstrations in St. Marks Square against "the Biennale of the bosses" closed the show in 1972.

Since then, the pavilions have become dilapidated and overgrown, their windows smashed, their walls peeling. Many thought the big show would never take place again. Some found it an anachronism anyway, with its national pavilions dotted around Venice's leafy public gardens like so many miniature embassies: The United States' tiny Monticello, Britain's neo-Palladian colonial, Germany's stripped Third Reich classical, the Soviet Union's pre-1917 Russian Orthodox.

The Biennale's prize award system was dropped in 1972, and to some observers it seems that the days of "national prestige" shows in the individual pavilions should also be over. Which countries had and which countries did not have pavilions depended partly on historical accident, partly on national prestige in the early years of this century. Like the Isola di Cimeto where the Venetians bury their dead (now you are only allowed to lie there 12 years before being transferred to a bone yard at the other end of the lagoon), the gardens have precious little room for new pavilions.

In 1974 the different Biennales (theater, cinema, visual arts) put together a joint show in support of Chile—an idea which received the support of the Italian Communist Party, strongly represented on the Biennale committee, and Venice's Communist Mayor. This Biennale has not followed that drastic program, but like many things in Italian political life, the shows are a compromise. National pavilions and national representation of artists remain, but the exhibiting countries were asked to work with a theme of "environment - participation - cultural - structures."

How this was interpreted by different countries has its own particular significance. Holland, Switzerland and the Eastern European countries took it all very literally, producing exhibitions which look like illustrations to a text book on urbanism.

Britain and Germany came up with their own very special interpretations of the theme, so special that it is likely that these pavilions would have looked much the same had there been no theme at all. The United States presented a revised version of a show originally put together and exhibited at the Fine Arts Center at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. Thomas M. Messer, director of the Guggenheim Museum and a member of the U. S. Government-sponsored Committee on International Exhibitions, which chose the show, writes in the catalog: "The theme proposed by Biennale authorities is, indeed, reflected only partially in the current American contribution, even though concern with environmental art has been a particularly American tendency." Apparently the Committee decided that to produce an adequate exhibition on this theme would require more time than was available.

which contains largely undistinguished works by distinguished names—is hardly of international caliber and can't have looked too good at Amherst either. Among the 15 artists represented are Robert Motherwell, Robert Rauschenberg, Agnes Martin, Donald Judd, H. C. Westermann, Andy Warhol and Edward Ruscha. Good works by those artists could have made a good show, but not in a space the size of the U.S. Pavilion (or any other country's pavilion, for that matter). With such a welter of things to see as at Venice, no less than a whole room or separate space for each artist is going to register on jaded eyes.

For one of the two large international theme exhibitions within the Giardini (housed in the central pavilion) the Italian critic Germano Celant has devised a stimulating presentation of "ambient" or environmental art, contrasting reconstructions from the heroic years of the 20's, such as Kandinsky's Berlin music room and Lissitzky's "proun" room, with post-war environmental work, including specially commissioned pieces by contemporary artists from Europe and America. Among the latter are Joseph Beuys, Sol Lewitt, Mario Merz, Bruce Nauman and Dan Graham. The Rome-based Greek artist Koumelis's room of tethered live horses was easily the showiest and most spectacular piece, arousing critical excitement and hostility in almost equal quantities, particularly among the animal-loving British. But there seemed a general consensus that the best of the post-war environmental work was by a young and little-known artist from Los Angeles, Maria Nordman. A bare, white painted room illuminated from the side by a single slit of light, it gives the impression on entering that it is filled with mist. Yet it is not mist but the effect of pure light itself in an environment where perceptual attractions are reduced to a minimum.

Joseph Beuys's contribution to Celant's environmental show is a room sealed off, but visible through familiar props of recent didactic seminars; the master frog from chalk to again. But these are clean slates, a new tabula rasa. Certainly Beuys which dominates pavilion, represents to his heretofore five imagery 1960's. politan Museum, can now be heard to speak with embarrassment—with, in fact, an unashamed glee—about his "expertise in marketing," and why the Met is planning to start construction within the very walls of the museum of what will be a veritable department store specializing in the sale of counterfeit art.

Whether we applaud this development or deplore it, the irony of the situation should not be lost on us. An institution whose entire raison d'être is to afford an experience of the real work of art is now emerging as the greatest single source of artistic counterfeits—as the source, in a sense, of a kind of artistic pollution.

Unfortunately, even if the museum visitor decides to defer his surrender to the siren song of the museum shop until his appetite for the real work of art has been sated, he may still find himself in the grip of this busy aids-to-art industry once he enters the galleries where the objects are. Between himself and the objects he has come to see, an army of museum functionaries now interposes its taste, its vision, its ideas and ideologies. In today's art museum, the galleries—whether they contain temporary exhibitions or permanent installations—are more and more a zone of factitious visual glamour. The walls are painted special colors and printed legends abound. And the lighting—oh, the lighting! What imagination, what energy, what money go into all this lighting, which treats every object as if it were, to begin with, something hidden that can be fully revealed to us only by means of a complex and expensive technology. Who could guess, as we rub our eyes and try to shade them from the glare, that the bulk of the objects we see in museums were created—and for a long time, enjoyed—under conditions of light far simpler than any that we now encounter?

The effect of all this artifice is to narrow the distance that separates our experience of the real work of art from that of its counterfeit. When the walls of the museum look more and more like a magazine layout, when the lighting of the object is designed to make it look as slick and glossy as a reproduction and the object itself is obliged to compete with reading matters for our attention, something precious is being lost to us. The pollution we have just escaped in the museum shop is almost worse, at times, in the museum

When requesting data from the national organizations, it is necessary to include as much information about the person you are researching as possible. In addition to the person's name, give birth date, birthplace, date of marriage, father's surname, mother's surname, death date, etc. It is wise to write to the organizations first and request literature about their genealogical services. The Mormon Church, for example, will send you a request form on which they ask you to list the necessary data for the person you are researching. Other organizations have similar forms.

There are thousands of local genealogical societies throughout the country which can prove helpful. These societies not only provide camaraderie, they are usually willing to share personal libraries, material and ideas with other enthusiasts. Local chapters can often be located through the reference centers of local libraries. Additional help can be garnered from national and regional genealogical magazines. Genealogical Helper is one of the hobby's most popular national monthly magazines and is distributed by the Everton Publishing Company, 526 Main Street, Logan, Utah 84321. Many genealogists place small ads in this magazine requesting information about the names they are researching. There are also several books available for genealogists: "Searching for Your Ancestors," by Gilbert H. Both should be available in your local library.

In checking these numerous sources you will undoubtedly find inconsistencies. Spelling will differ, for example, as will dates. Some genealogists require three sources to document their information while others aren't nearly as particular. Each genealogist, however, resolves this problem in his own way.

With patience and a little luck, genealogy can keep you busy for the rest of your life. H. S. Mr. Ritter has spent 20 years researching his family history and has thus far traced seven generations of Ritters.

Position after 29... R-B6 ch

When you have blown the game and your opponent is making hash out of you, drop a bomb, any bomb you can get your hands on, for a startled opponent is a vulnerable one. There is nothing like an audacious, unexpected sacrifice to rattle your opponent, causing him to lose concentration.

It helps if you set the piece down with a smart, confident rap in the style of the late Paul Keress, a great master of the art of pulling out bad ones. But even in games played by telephone as in the National Chess League, the striking shot without embellishment may still have the full effect.

In the encounter between John Watson of the San Francisco Dragons and Sal Matera of the New York Threats, Matera faltered badly after having built up to a winning position, yet he successfully confused his opponent by an ingenious, though not quite sound, rook offer.

Watson's maneuver beginning with 13 B-B1 to get in 15 N-B4 took so much time that Matera had no trouble counterattacking in the center with 16... P-B4. Matera followed that up energetically with 18... N-K5; 19 NxN, PxN, when Watson could not spoil the black pawn position by 20 PxP because of 20... RxRch and 21... QxN.

After Matera stepped up the fight from a new direction with 20... P-QN4; 21 R-PxP, BxNp, Watson could find nothing better than 22

RxKp with a forced loss of the exchange to 22... N-B3. However, Matera, either overconfident or careless, played 26... R-B2? in place of the correct 26... B-KB3, after which 27 B-R6 could have been met by 27... RxN; 28 BxP, B-KxchP followed by 29... R-B3 with a totally won position.

Watson brilliantly seized his chance with 27 QxPch, 28 B-R6, sacrificing a piece, and 29 R-K1, threatening 30 Q-R8 mate. Nevertheless, Matera, unwilling to give up the ghost, fired back the diabolical 29... R-B6ch, grievously upsetting Watson.

Watson should have ignored the interference to play 30 K-N2, when 30... Q-B2; 31 Q-R8ch, Q-N1; 32 BxRch, K-B2; 33 B-N6ch, KxR; 34 Q-R6ch, K-B2; 35 KxR allows no defense to 36 Q-B6 mate, since 35... QxB; 36 R-K7ch wins the queen, while 35... Q-Q1; 36 B-Q4 is equally fatal.

In this hypothetical line, 30... RxP would be better, though 31 Q-R8ch, B-N1; 32 KxR, P-Q4; 33 R-KB1 is untenable for Black since the coming 34 K-N2ch or 34 K-N4ch cannot be warded off.

Watson, however, too eager to recover his lost material, lunged for 30 KxR and after 30... Q-B2ch blundered again with 31 B-B5? If he had played 31 B-B4, he would still have held a slight advantage in an unclear position.

Thus, Matera's 31... Q-R4ch won a piece and, consolidating with great efficiency, he quickly reduced Watson to hopelessness. After 45... R-KB1, Watson could neither give perpetual check nor defend his own king and had to resign.

BRIDGE

ALAN TRUSCOTT

Bicentennial War Games

Almost all the Bicentennial celebrations this month have represented a conscious effort to recreate the historical circumstances of 1776. But it is unlikely that any of the planners have had as much assistance from a genie as did some players of a Bicentennial bridge match in Springfield, Mass., during the holiday week-end earlier this month: The fortunes of bridge war in 1976 paralleled in microcosm the fortunes of revolutionary war 200 years earlier.

In the early skirmishes the British Redcoats, fighting with the training and discipline that was the product of earlier battles in Europe, seemed likely to gain a convincing victory. But as time went on they were outmaneuvered by some fighting New Englanders who showed scant respect for the traditional techniques of warfare.

The British foursome consisted of players who were among the best in London two decades ago but now make their homes on this side of the Atlantic: Sam Kehela of Toronto who resumed an old partnership with Ronald Crown of Palm Beach, Fla.; and Ken Barbour of Sudbury, Mass., who played with this writer.

The opposing New England army was larger, younger and enthusiastic: Lou Reich and Bart Bramley of Waltham, Mass.; Mark Feldman of Cambridge, Mass.; Marc Jacobus and Steve Sion of Boston; Allan Colkin of Providence, R. I.; Arthur Waldmann of Middletown, Conn., and Marvin Rosenblatt of Bristol, Conn.

When the match was one-quarter finished, the British led by the substantial margin of 37 international match points. But then came the crucial deal. The Redcoats turned in a better bidding performance which ultimately increased their lead substantially; but the gods of the game decided to play favorites, showing everyone that they intended the colonists to win their war.

A glance at the North-South hands makes it clear that North and South should reach a game contract and could reasonably select any denomination except clubs. The British played in three no-trump, which was entirely safe as the cards lie. It could have been in jeopardy if West had held, for example, a five-card club suit headed by the ace and had led there. In that case, the declarer would have tried an avoidance play in diamonds, leading from dummy to his ten with the intention of developing the suit without allowing East to gain the lead.

The New England auction began with one no-trump and a Stayman response. Three diamonds was forcing and hinted at a slam, and South felt that his maximum point-count entitled him to cooperate. However, there was a slight confusion about the meaning of four spades: South assumed that this indicated four-card support. All the subsequent bids, including four no-trump, were natural and non-forcing, but the partnership wandered on to slam. South kept reverting to spades in the belief that this represented a four-four fit.

West made an attacking lead of a heart, thinking it might be necessary to establish a trick in that suit before the declarer could conveniently take discards on diamonds.

The declarer blanched when he saw the dummy. It was clear that he was in a horrible contract, with much less than a 10 percent chance of success. In these desperate straits he took out a magic bottle, summoned a genie, and demanded three wishes.

He started modestly with a 36 percent wish. "Please give me an even trump break," he requested nervously.

Feeling bolder, he issued an 18 percent order: "Give West Q x x of hearts," he instructed.

Like most men with a genie to do their bidding South finally became highly ambitious.

"Give somebody the queen-jack doubleton of diamonds" he commanded firmly. Grumbling slightly, the genie duly made this 7 percent arrangement.

South had not felt like wasting a wish asking that East have the club ace, but this small extra convenience was granted him in any event. Now he was able to play the hand. He played low from dummy and captured the heart ten with the king. Then he crossed to the spade queen and led a club.

East put up the ace and returned a trump. No longer needing a spade ruff South drew the missing trumps. Now he had three chances for success: bring home all the diamonds; bring home three more heart tricks; or squeeze West if he had begun with the heart queen and length in both red suits.

South cashed his high diamonds and when the honors dropped doubleton he thanked the genie again and claimed the slam, having no need to fall back on the hearts. East-West muttered to themselves, for the genie had swung 21 international match points. South was unrepentant. "We bid the right slam," he told his teammates later. "Six diamonds would have had a lower percentage."

This week, invite a friend for dinner

Serve something unusual, something great, something you discovered in The New York Times.

Try something made with green peppercorns, a spice that gives the flavor of pepper without overwhelming you. It was one of the most popular of all the recipes The Times published last year.

Steak au poivre Vert

- 1 (1-to-1 1/2-inch thick) sirloin steak (about three pounds) Salt 1 tablespoon Cognac or whisky 1 tablespoon drained green peppercorns, coarsely crushed in a mortar with a pestle 1/4 cup heavy cream 1/2 teaspoon Dijon mustard

- 2. Remove any excess fat from the skillet. Add the Cognac or whisky and heat, stirring. Add the crushed green peppercorns and cream. Bring to a simmer, stirring. Stir in the mustard and pour sauce over the steak. Yield: Three servings.

1. Cut off a piece of fat from the steak and render it in a heavy skillet. Pan-fry the steak to desired degree of doneness. Transfer to a warm platter, season with salt and keep warm. Note: Green peppercorns in vinegar are available at Bloomingdale's and Lakwan-Bj-The-Barnet, 1577 First Avenue (at 82d Street) and 968 Second Avenue (near 51st Street).

Right now, invite a friend for breakfast

Just mail this invitation and The New York Times will start arriving for breakfast every morning. And you'll start wondering how you ever got through breakfast without it. When you have The Times delivered, breakfast becomes the most interesting meal of the day. A chance to catch up on your favorite things before you leave home. A chance to catch up with the world before you step out into it. Can't wait to begin? Just phone toll-free 800-525-6400. Or drop this invitation in the mail.

From the Past: Culture and Causes

The culture and causes of an earlier time have inspired new issues of unusual interest from Great Britain, Canada and Nationalist China along with other stamps that attest to individuals of note and national attainments.

The British have looked at their past from two different perspectives, recalling the centuries-old traditions that have now become part of the cultural life of the nation and the struggles to change the way so many Britons lived and worked 150 years ago amid the incredibly appalling conditions of the Industrial Revolution.

The songs, music, dance and poetry of the bards, are what the British have recalled on a set of four vertical stamps, all in six colors, coming out on Aug. 4. Two are devoted to the Royal National Eisteddfod, which will be celebrating its 800th anniversary when this year's event takes place next month in Cardigan, Wales. The other two are devoted to Morris Dances and Highland Gatherings.

The Welsh, with their love of singing, like to get together in family or local groups for songs and recitals in a Noson Lawen, An Eisteddfod is a Noson Lawen on a larger scale. Many towns and valleys have their own Eisteddfodau, but the national one is world famous. It is held in North Wales and South Wales on alternate years. The most exciting moment is the Crowning of the Bard, winner of an epic poem competition, in a ceremony by the Gorsedd or circle of Druids led by the Archdruid.

The 8 1/2-pence and 13p stamps mark the National Eisteddfod anniversary. The 8 1/2p depicts the Gorsedd sward ceremony, with a white-robed Archdruid in the foreground and dark-robed Druids behind. The 13p displays one of the traditional instruments of Wales—the telyn or harp.

The 10p shows a man doing a Morris Dance with other dancers behind him. The dance, derived from Recalling culture of British and Chinese past.

Spain and introduced in England in the 14th century, is closely associated with the folk culture of the English. Its form since its introduction has been a group of six men, a fool, a boy dressed as a woman and a hobby horse, all in outlandish costumes. A piper, kilt swinging and striding to the skirl of his pipes, with kilted dancers behind him, is on the 11p. The piper is a vital part of the traditional Gatherings, held not only all over Scotland but where Scots have migrated in parts of Canada and New Zealand, and to a lesser extent Australia and the United States.

The cause of creating a better life in Britain in the basics of existence is the theme of an earlier set of four that honors by name—but not portrait—some of the great social reformers of the 19th century. The four stamps, in dark hues, have the symbolic use of hands as a central theme.

Hands hewing at the coal face of a mine on an 8 1/2p recall Thomas Hephurn, who in 1831 founded the first Union of Northumberland and Durham Coalminers and in a lifetime struggle won shorter hours for miners. A child's hands on factory machinery on a 10p symbolize the work of Robert Owen, who set up model cotton mills. Children were regularly employed in the mills. Hands sweeping a chimney on an 11p honor Lord Shaftesbury who spurred social and industrial reforms for better treatment and tolerance of the mentally ill, and for the exclusion of women and children under 13 from working in mines and at similar tasks. Sometimes boys as young as four and five worked in the mines. Hands clutching prison bars on a 13p symbolize the work of Elizabeth Fry in prison reform.

From Canada have come this month two commemorative stamps: one for Robert Service, whose writings vividly portrayed the Canadian North and who is best known to Americans for his "Shooting of Dan McGrew"; and one for Germaine Guevremont, who won fame in the 1940's and 1950's for her novels about French Canada. The stamps depict scenes from their works.

Service, an Englishman who grew up in Scotland and described himself as a born tramp, came to Canada in 1894 and made his way to Whitehorse and Dawson in the Yukon. To divert himself he wrote poems collected in "Songs of a Sourdough" and "Ballads of a Cheechako."

The commemorative for him illustrates the closing of his "Cremation of Sam McGee," the lines "And there sat Sam, looking cool and calm, in the heart of the furnace roar... Since I left Plumtree in Tennessee, it's the first time I've been warm."

The other commemorative depicts the opening scene of the Guevremont novel "The Outsider," her best known work, which narrates the impact of a stranger, a young man, on a French-Canadian family. Both commemoratives are 2-cent denominations.

The culture of ancient China is depicted on two sets of four from Nationalist China on the island of Taiwan. One set continues the series for ancient coins and portrays shovel-shaped "pu" money; the other continues the series devoted to famous paintings on moon-shaped fans.

Chinese coins originated in very ancient times in a variety of forms: cowrie shells, carved bone and bronze cowries and gradually knife-shaped coins and later small bronze shovels or "pu" money. A 2-cent stamp shows what is probably the earliest Chinese coin of metal, a shovel-shaped "Kung Shou Pu" or, roughly, "coul with a hole at the head," from the 12th century B. C. The 5¢, 8¢ and 10¢ stamps bear pointed, round and square shapes, all going back long before the Christian era.

The set of painted moon fans, which go back to the Hsia, Shang and Chou dynasties (2205-225 B. C.), depicts fans of the Sung dynasty (960-1279 A.D.) when Chinese painting, especially of birds and flowers, was at its heyday. The fans show "Hibiscus" by Li Tung on a 2-cent stamp, "Lilies" by Lin Ch'un on a 5-cent stamp, "Two Deer, Mushrooms and Pine" by Mou Chung-fu on an 8-cent stamp, "Wild Flowers and Quail" by Li An-chung on a 10-cent stamp.

Two phases of its cultural heritage are presented on stamps from West Germany. The 100th anniversary of the Bayreuth Festival is commemorated on a 50-pfenning stamp that shows a stage set up for a Wagnerian opera. A set of four Archaeological Cultural Heritage stamps shows ancient ornaments of Celtic times.

On the other hand, HID lamps can provide from 1000 to 5000 foot-candles, depending on factors such as wattage and distance.

Cost is often cited as a drawback to the use of these lamps. However, once these lamps are viewed in proper perspective, the cost factor is greatly diminished.

At first glance HID lamps may appear confusing, since a number of different types are available from manufacturers such as GE, Duro-Test and Sylvania.

Later forms, such as Color Improved or Deluxe White, were coated with a red-emitting phosphor which greatly improved their effect on plant growth.

The shape of HID lamps results in a circular distribution of light, as opposed to the "bench-shaped" area produced by conventional fluorescent tubes.

Trees to grow under these lamps include the following: Norfolk Island pine (Araucaria excelsa) is ideal for delicate, elegant foliage.

UMBRELLA TREES are reliable choices. Schefflera (Brassia) with rich foliage and its somewhat look-alike genera Cussonia are excellent.

Concrete Terrace Can Be Built in Square

have much greater holding power than ordinary nails. The first step in building a terrace of this type is to make a scale drawing of the layout on graph paper. Generally speaking the longest pieces of lumber obtainable should be used for the perimeter or border strips to minimize the number of joints required. If possible, the pieces that go across the narrower dimension (the width) of the terrace should be in one piece. Short pieces are then used between these (parallel to the length of the terrace) to form the squares. After figuring all this out on paper, one can make a list of the actual lengths needed to form the 2x4 grid. If pieces will be notched or dadoed where they join, allowance for this extra length must be made when figuring the length of the short pieces.

Since cutting the pieces to length involves much duplicate cutting the fastest way to do this job is with a power saw—especially if each joint will be notched or dadoed as pictured. Some may find it simpler to give the list of pieces to size (they will notch them also if a milling fee is paid).

After the lumber for the framework is ready, all soil is removed from the area to be paved. If the soil is firm and well drained, the concrete can be poured right on top of this, but if the soil contains a lot of clay or does not drain rapidly after a rain, then it is best to dig down an extra four inches and spread a layer of compacted gravel over the ground first to serve as a base.

Although a footing around the perimeter is not necessarily required for a terrace of this kind, it is a good idea to include one in areas where heavy freezing may be encountered—a foundation footing will lessen the chances of heaving or cracking. A footing is also advisable if a roof of some kind will be put up over the terrace at a later date (it is required by local codes in many areas when a permanent roof is installed).

To construct a foundation footing a trench must be dug around the perimeter about 3 inches wide, and deep enough to go down below the frostline (30 to 36 inches in most parts of the Northeast). This trench is then filled with poured concrete, or with cement blocks joined together with mortar.

After the site has been prepared and leveled off, the next step is assembling the wood grid on the ground. Start by first laying out all perimeter pieces to outline the terrace, then assemble the corner joints. Lengthwise joints (these should be half-lapped or joined end-to-end with brass plates screwed to the sides) are assembled next to complete the perimeter framework.

The next step is installing all the long pieces that go across the terrace. If joints are being made with notches as pictured (the notches will have been cut ahead of time by the lumber yard or in the or in the workshop if you have a table saw or radial arm saw), then the location of each joint is automatically indicated, but if simple butt joints are being made then each joint should be marked by holding a spacer block in place between the ends of the long pieces to line them up prior to driving in nails or screws.

After all the long pieces that go completely across the width of the terrace have been installed, the short cross pieces that will form the squares are added. Here again, if pieces have been notched ahead of time to form joints, location of each joint is automatic. However, if joints are not notched, then a spacer block is used to locate each joint. When installing these cross pieces, screws (or nails) can be driven straight through the long piece into the end grain—but this can be done at one end only. At the other end screws will have to go in at an angle (much like treading) because the piece behind it will have covered up that end.

For the neatest appearance and to simplify leveling off the concrete job, it is a top edge exactly flush with the pieces. I may vary line up the joint is for edges will

Q I am about to paint the front doors and garage door of my house, but notice that the doors have very fine, hairline vertical cracks in the paint. The garage door also has spider-like fine cracks—something like an eggshell. Can you suggest the simplest method for preparing these surfaces for painting?—W.F., Montreal, Que.

A The best solution in both cases would be to remove all the paint down to the bare wood with a paint and varnish remover, then apply a coat of primer followed by one or two coats of house paint in the color of your choice. The vertical cracks sound as though they are following the grain of the wood, which might indicate that the wood itself is cracking. If so, filling may be required after the primer coat. If you don't want to remove all the paint you can try sanding till reasonably smooth and dull, then filling the cracks with an exterior vinyl spackling compound, or a marine compound sold for use on wood boats (for filling fine cracks). This can then be painted over and should hold up if the wood underneath is sound, and if the old paint is adhering tightly.

Q Is there any product I can apply to a slate floor in my hallway to give it a slight shine, yet will not need constant waxing?—L.Q., Floral Park, N.Y.

A Most paint stores and many slate and stone dealers sell clear penetrating sealers that are suitable for use on slate. These will give a dull, "oiled" look to the floor, but not a high shine. They will last longer if waxed occasionally, but waxing is not essential—leaving it off just means you will have to reapply the sealer more often.

Q Do you have any suggestions as to how I can mount stereo speakers on a Sheetrock wall? The speakers are approximately 12 by 13 by 24 inches, and they weigh about 40 pounds each.—L.H., Floral Park, N.Y.

A If possible the most solid mounting would result if you can position the speakers so they can be mounted to the 2x4 studs inside the wall. If this is possible, drive in long screws or screw hooks, then hang the speakers on these. If you cannot locate the speakers directly over studs, then the next best solution is to use expansion type anchors. Many variations are sold in all hardware stores and lumber yards. These are inserted through a hole drilled or punched in the Sheetrock, then a screw in the center is tightened. This causes the metal part to expand behind the wall and grip securely. These anchoring devices come in various sizes, and there are some that will easily support 40 pounds. However, I would recommend using two anchors for each speaker—just as a safety measure.

Q I have to fasten quite a few 2x3's to the concrete walls of my basement to frame out rooms and cabinets I am building there. What is the simplest way to nail these to the concrete?—H.G., Troy, N.Y.

A Although you can buy hardened steel nails that will go through the wood into the concrete, I would recommend buying one of the special hammer-in fastening tools that are sold for this purpose. They hold special nails inside, and have an anvil-like piston that you strike with a hammer. This drives the nails through the wood and into the concrete without bending. A small hand sledge or heavy hammer is best for this.

Pepsi-Cola Comes Out of the Kitchen

recent months, Kendall, Pepsi's chairman and former Presi- has been taking hand-to-hand waged on tele- boards and on cola trucks, has sized by the calling that is er advertising, ad headlines: "Nationwide, a drinkers pre- Coke."

Coke drinkers prefer Pepsi? Atlanta could hardly sit still for that. "Coca-Cola is preferred 2 to 1 over Pepsi in the New York area," came the rejoinder. "Coca-Cola is preferred 2 to 1 over Pepsi in the New York, New Jersey, Conn. area." And so went similar statements, region by region. The battle was joined.

Mr. Kendall, whose outer office contains inscribed pictures of President Ford (autographed pictures of Mr. Nixon and his family are in the inner office) talked the other day about the origins of the current cola war.

Ironically, he said, the concept of a confrontation with Coke grew out of market research conducted for Pepsi's previous, rather lackluster campaign: "The taste that beats the others cold."

The research had indicated that more than half the Coke drinkers who participated in a blind test of Pepsi and Coke preferred the taste of Pepsi, he said.

So Pepsi decided to launch a "challenge" campaign in a marketing area where it had traditionally been weak: Dallas and Fort Worth.

It blitzed the region with advertising and promotion and in the last year or so, its share of the soft drink market in Dallas more than doubled—from less than 7 percent to about 14 percent, according to industry sources. (During the same period Coke reportedly remained relatively stable with about a quarter of the market.)

The challenge then went out in San Antonio and Corpus Christi, then Michigan, greater New York and Los Angeles.

Coke, for its part, at first attacked the methodology of Pepsi's testing, and then began stressing sales. Pepsi has countered the latest Coke strategy by saying it has nothing to do with "taste."

Entering into Pepsi's decision to employ comparative advertising was its unhappy experience as the victim of a similar strategy in the early 1970's.

After the government ordered cyclamates removed from diet drinks, Pepsi added some sugar to offset the bitter aftertaste of saccharine and thereby raised the calorie count of Diet-Pepsi to about 30. Coke's diet drink, Tab, promptly attacked with boasts about its own single-calorie count. Diet-Pepsi had to retreat.

How does Mr. Kendall feel about squaring off with J. Paul Austin, his counterpart at Coca-Cola? "I love to battle him in the market place," said Mr. Kendall.

PepsiCo is the nation's 83d largest industrial corporation, with sales last year of $2.3 billion and earnings of $105 million. (Coca-Cola, the 64th largest corporation, had sales of $2.9 billion and earnings of $239 million.)

While Pepsi's largest single product still is soft drinks, the company has diversified in the last decade to the point where beverages account for only about 45 percent of its sales and earnings. The company's other major line is snack foods, notably such

Life Under the Sign of the Deer

By JEAN CHRISTENSEN

BUTLER, Mo.—Every year the newspapers, television and radio stations around here are filled with stories about the wheat crop.

The frost has destroyed it, the drought has decimated it, the floods make it impossible to harvest, the prices aren't high enough to cover the farmers' expenses. And most years the wheat yield turns out better than the previous year, and the money pours in.

Butler, with its 3,984 citizens is a prosperous little place, 75 miles from Kansas City and typically Midwestern with its county courthouse standing on the town square. It's farming country, and one of the centers of wealth is Deems Farm Equipment of Butler, the local John Deere dealership.

Jean Christensen is a reporter on the Kansas City Star.

"Business is terrible. You can put my name down but I'm broke." Lelan C. Deems tells a representative of the National Federation of Independent Businesses, coming around for the annual dues of $24.

But business at the glass-fronted showroom under the sign of John Deere's yellow deer isn't terrible. Customers are buying tractors, combines, brush hogs, plows, planters, balers and forage equipment. Mr. Deems says he sells $2.5 million worth a year; he calls it "a good living" and in farm equipment circles it's said that a business of this size works down to a before-tax profit of a quarter-million dollars a year.

Mr. Deems and his farm equipment business symbolize the boom that has swept through American agriculture the past four years and is still continuing. The value of agricultural, forest and fishery products in this nation rose from $35 billion in 1972 to $55 billion in 1975, according to Government figures, and when farming is good the implement dealers prosper, too. This year record corn harvests are expected and what is to come in just a notch under last year's record, and a hungry world buys and keeps prices up.

Still, tough-times talk is natural in farm country. "I like to tell 'em that," says Mr. Deems about his own poor-mouthing over the $24. "Then they really start scrapping." The farmers talk to Lelan Deems the same way.

John Edmiston, for example, dropped in recently to talk about a round baler, a $6,230 machine that makes 1,500-pound round hay bales. He folded his hands inside the bib of his overalls and spit his chewing tobacco between sentences. On his feet were loafers and his socks had holes in their heels.

Ford record been in the economic area? And will that scoreboard be the major issue this fall at the polls when the Republicans pit President Ford, Ronald Reagan or perhaps some one else against the Democratic ticket of Carter and Mondale?

This is an appropriate time to assess Gerald R. Ford's economic record. In two weeks the country will mark had to be thoroughly mixed, and final judgment had to be reserved. Under his stewardship, the nation had made considerable progress to that point. In emerging from a deep recession and starting slowly along a recovery road, but was still confronted with excessively high unemployment, inflation and interest rates.

The picture is clearer now.

In the process, consumer and business confidence have been rebuilt, the vitality of the American economy has been restored along with those of many other industrial nations, and the nation's demoralized mood in the Watergate trauma has been uplifted.

In those respects, Mr. Ford's tenure has been quite positive and he can take housing, education and medical aid for the millions of the nation's poor and less-advantaged citizens.

Critics of the Ford Administration would also cite an inadequate measure of attention in dealing with the financial straits of many of the nation's major cities and the absence of a comprehensive, cohesive, far-reaching national energy policy, though, in both of those areas, the Administration and the Congress must certainly share the blame.

As the second anniversary of President Ford's Administration approaches just prior to the Republican convention and this fall's election campaign, the pluses and minuses in his economic record are certain to be given greater attention. The debate started in a subdued way at the recent Democratic convention with the adoption of the party's platform and the selection of its Presidential ticket. And it was furthered last Wednesday in an article by economist Herbert Stein, who had been President Nixon's chief economic advisor.

The Democrats have been emphasizing the need for faster economic growth and more stimulative national policies to reduce unemployment, while Mr. Stein and other backers of the Ford policies have been stressing his fight against inflation and greatly enlarged Federal spending in company with moderately expansive fiscal and monetary programs to get the economy moving upward again.

Mr. Stein, now a professor of economics at the University of Virginia, stirred the debate over economic policies in his Wall Street Journal essay when he termed the Ford policies "resolute and responsible" in the situation that faced him.

Maintaining that when the President came to office on Aug. 9, 1974, Mr. Ford saw his duty and he did it. "Mr. Stein summed up the Ford record in this fashion: "Confronting the worst recession of the postwar period, after a decade of accelerating inflation which had reached a frightening rate, he had to resist temptations and demands for strong action to pump up the economy. He had to be willing to accept, and to lead the people to accept, sacrifices in the form of unemployment in order to avoid the continuation of double-digit inflation, or its revival after a short lull. He did what had to be done, directly through his support of the restrained policy of the Federal Reserve. We now seem to be well launched on a healthy recovery, the inflation rate has fallen, and there is a good prospect of avoiding a rise of the rate if we continue cautious policy."

The former head of the Nixon Administration's Council of Economic Advisers also cited other actions of Mr. Ford that he considers positive in this statement.

"He has kept the Council on Wage and Price Stability from becoming an agency for crypto-wage-and-price controls. After some indecision, he came out in support of the second anniversary of his call from the bullpen to replace the starting pitcher, Richard M. Nixon, after his sudden departure under an intense battering over the Watergate issue. Mr. Ford has been on the mound for a sufficient time to gain control of the game, display his economic repertoire and assume responsibility for the ultimate outcome.

The comeback from recession is well established, despite the faltering of the economy in the most recent quarter. Inflation has been greatly reduced; business activity has strengthened significantly; the financial health of the country, the public and business has improved markedly; total employment has risen substantially; the Federal Budget is under better control, and economic relations with the United States' partners in the Western World have been more firmly established and coordinated.

What Am I to Believe About The Social Security System?

During the past several years the Social Security System (Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance System—OASDI in government shorthand) has been the object of much concern and discussion. So much so, that most individuals in the nation are apt to be bewildered.

Most news coverage has generally dealt with only small pieces of the system and has tended to accentuate problems in an out-of-context explanation of what is, at best, a complex program.

What follows here is an overview of OASDI—some of its problems, prospects and possible solutions—in a way most citizens can understand. This information covers the basic structure of OASDI and its financing. It is excerpted and digested from a more complete paper covering such additional topics as are indicated at the bottom of this advertisement.*

A copy of the complete paper may be obtained at no cost by writing to The Bankers Life, Consumer Services SS4, 711 High Street, Des Moines, Iowa 50307. This overview is being offered as a public service. Be assured that no sales effort of any kind will be directed toward those who wish to respond to the above offer for a copy of the complete paper.

Is the Social Security system in serious financial difficulty?

If the question implies that the system is in any sense bankrupt, or that it has difficulties greater than it can handle, the answer must be "no". Perhaps a qualified "yes" is more appropriate, however, since financing problems have arisen with which those interested in the future well-being of the Social Security system must be concerned.

The most recent reports of the Trustees of the OASDI system project that benefits and expenses over the next few years will exceed income from social security taxes and investment earnings. This means that the trust funds, amounting to $43 billion at the end of 1975, may decrease to zero by as early as 1980. This short-range picture has been greatly affected by the high rates of inflation experienced in the recent past, causing an 8% increase in all benefits in mid-1975. It has also been affected by high levels of unemployment. If nothing is done immediately about the short-range financing of social security, the trust funds will be called upon to carry out their contingency reserve function—i.e., that of keeping the benefits flowing while changes in the financing are being considered.

More serious is the long-range picture. About twenty years from now the projected level of taxes falls far short of the benefits then to be paid; and after the turn of the century the financing may be even less adequate. We can trace this longer range imbalance, which has only become apparent quite recently, to specific economic, social and demographic forces which combine to have rather serious consequences for the long-range health of the system.

What are the economic forces affecting Social Security financing?

By far the most serious is inflation, and its immediate consequences. The financing of the system is very sensitive to the relative rates of increase in consumer prices and in wages.

The benefits for those already on the beneficiary roles increase automatically with the Consumers Price Index, as do the potential benefits for those joining the roles in the future. The outgo from the system, therefore, increases directly with inflation.

Inflation in prices is accompanied by inflation of wages. The income to the system increases as average wages rise, because social security taxes are a percent of wages. Although increasing wages also have the effect of increasing benefits (because the system is wage related), rising wages by themselves have the effect of improving the financial state.

The long-range financial health of the OASDI system therefore depends on how wage and price increases compare with each other. Only if there is a rather substantial gain in real wages (i.e., wages grow about twice as fast as prices) can the system be self-supporting at the tax rates now provided. Although the United States has had gains in wages of this general magnitude over much of the last quarter century, it seems doubtful that these can continue.

What are the implications of low fertility rates?

The United States experienced a "baby boom" after World War II, with very high fertility rates continuing well into the 1960's. For the last ten years, however, these rates have fallen off sharply. The total fertility rate, the number of children the average woman would bear over her lifetime if fertility rates at each age were to stay at their present level, has now declined to a point below 2. We have reached the conditions necessary for zero-population-growth, so if these low fertility rates continue the population will level off eventually. Even so, the population will continue to grow for quite some time because we now have more women in the child-bearing ages, a legacy of the post-war baby boom.

The effect of these changing fertility patterns on social security financing is favorable as to the short run. There will be substantial numbers of new entrants to the labor force for another few years, until the late end of the baby boom gets out of school. The system should thereby gain in social security taxes. Shortly after the turn of the century, however, we can expect a strain on social security financing.

The ratio today is 3 beneficiaries to 10 taxpayers, but demographic changes could push the ratio up to 4 or even 5 to 10. This would have an important and unfavorable effect on the financing of the system.

What about the argument that the OASDI system is regressive?

The concept that the OASDI system is regressive comes from looking only at the tax side, ignoring the benefit structure.

The social security tax, viewed entirely as a tax and ignoring its special purpose, is regressive—low income workers pay a larger proportion of their incomes as social security tax than do the higher paid. The social security tax is actually proportional to income, but with two exceptions. There is no tax above the maximum taxable earnings base, and there is no tax on investment income. For these reasons the social security tax, looked upon by itself, can be properly considered regressive.

When we consider the benefit side of the system, however, we find exactly the opposite. Benefits for the low income people, in proportion to the taxes they have paid, are much higher than for the highly paid. For the low paid, the social security primary benefit provides a wage replacement in the neighborhood of 60%, while the high paid receives only about 30% of the taxable earnings base, and nothing in excess thereof. This progressivity in the benefit structure outweighs the regressivity in the tax structure, so that the system taken as a whole is clearly progressive. The system was clearly intended to be progressive in nature, and it actually works out to be.

Is anything being done about the actuarial imbalance?

Yes. Much good work has already been done, and more is going forward at the moment.

First, the actuaries employed by the Social Security Administration brought the problem to the attention of the executive and legislative branches of government and to the general public—first in the 1974 Report of the Trustees of the OASDI system, and again in the 1975 Report. The 1976 Report will undoubtedly provide updated information.

Second, the Advisory Council on Social Security, a group of public minded citizens appointed in 1974 in accordance with the Social Security law, made its report in early 1975. The financing of the OASDI system was the subject of the Council's major attention, and the matter to which many of its recommendations were directed.

Finally, two successive panels of actuaries and economists have been appointed by Congress to review the specific recommendations of the Council.

All in all, both the legislative and executive branches of government are taking the problems seriously—and there is hope that legislative action improving the situation can be enacted before the 94th Congress goes out of existence at the end of 1976.

What can or should be done to solve the Social Security financing problems?

Changes that may be needed to bring the future benefits and future taxes into balance are of a somewhat controversial nature. They will not be quickly decided.

1. An increase in the social security tax rate paid by employers, employees, and the self-employed. The increase can be modest for the near future, but may be quite substantial 25 years from now. The Administration has proposed an increase in the OASDI employer-employee tax rate from 4.95% to 5.25%, first effective in 1977.
2. An increase in the maximum earnings on which taxes are paid and on which benefits are based. This approach has always appealed to the legislators, and the taxable earnings base has been increased substantially in recent years. Under present law the base goes up automatically as average earnings rise. For 1976, it is $15,300. For 1977, it is likely to be $16,500 (or thereabouts). A further increase in this base would help the financing very little.
3. A gradual moving of the retirement age upward, to counter the expected increase in the ratio of beneficiaries to workers. This possibility was mentioned by the Advisory Council, but it has not yet received the attention it deserves.

4. Financing of a part of social security from general revenues, in place of the current full reliance on the payroll tax.

None of these alternatives is particularly attractive, but some combination of the four named above is likely to be necessary somewhere down the road. There is one change of a less controversial nature that can and should be made fairly soon. This is a technical change recommended by the Advisory Council, designed to improve the stability of the system under conditions of inflation. This proposal has been called by some the "uncoupling" proposal. By itself uncoupling will reduce, but will not eliminate, the long-range actuarial deficit.

How do you summarize the outlook for OASDI financing?

The Social Security system has recently been subjected to economic and social forces that raise questions about the soundness of its financing. Although relatively minor adjustments are needed within a year or two to solve its short-term problems, the real concern is with the long-range outlook, heavily impacted by the current low fertility rates in contrast to the baby-boom following World War II, and by the possibility of high inflation rates and smaller future gains in real earnings.

More financing than provided by current law will be needed, especially after the turn of the century, unless current trends are reversed or retirement ages are raised. This additional financing can come from higher payroll tax rates, or an infusion of general revenue financing.

In any event there is one action that can and should be taken to stabilize the system under conditions of inflation, improve its equity between various groups, and help with the actuarial deficit. The Advisory Council's recommendation as to a benefit formula change points the way to this important first step.

The information offered in this public service message was prepared by C.L. Trowbridge who joined The Bankers Life in 1938 and is now our Senior Vice President and Chief Actuary.

Mr. Trowbridge was first elected to the Board of Governors of the Society of Actuaries in 1969 and served as its President during 1975. He is a member of the Pension Research Council affiliated with the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce. From 1971 to 1973 he was Chief Actuary of the Social Security Administration and served as actuarial consultant to the Advisory Council on Social Security while it was making its important study in 1974.

Harvey Kapnick keeps his peers in an uproar over audacious stances, while insisting his staff hew to accounting's straight and narrow path.

The disclosure of the partnership's internal financial condition was unprecedented in the profession.

A few weeks ago the Andersen firm hired Haslink & Sells to audit the firm's books. Only once before has an accounting firm opened its books to a competitor. That was in 1975, when Peat Marwick Mitchell & Company, the nation's largest auditor, hired Arthur Young & Company for an estimated $500,000 to audit it. But, according to Mr. Kapnick, the Haslink audit will not add to the financial data Andersen discloses already.

It spent $150,000 for an independent public review, published late in 1975, on all facets of the firm's operations. The review board, set up in 1974 includes former Michigan Governor George Romney and former heads of the S.E.C., the Internal Revenue Service and the Federal Communications Commission.

It supported a congressional proposal to require auditing firms to disclose the pay of their top three officers, although Mr. Kapnick declined during a recent interview to say what his was. (Based on figures in the firm's 1975 annual report the one time Michigan farm boy earned something less than $500,000, a portion of which goes back to the partnership as compulsory additional investment.)

For all its apparent contrariness, Arthur Andersen is purely and truly Establishment, an unabashed capitalist with ties to the biggest and most powerful corporations in this country and abroad.

Among its 50,000 clients are Amtrak, Avis, Bache, Getty Oil, Holiday Inns, L.T.T., Kraftco, Marriott, Levi Strauss, Texaco, MGM, Schlitz and United Airlines, plus charities, school boards, unions, churches and museums. It's a special consultant to Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon on New York City's fiscal problems.

Last year it accepted the permanent auditing assignment for the Democratic National Committee. A short while later the Republican National Committee also signed on, and this year both President Ford's and Jimmy Carter's election committees named Andersen as their auditing firm.

The image of the auditor with a contrary opinion ends at the client's doorstep. On the rare occasions when the firm simply cannot accept certain accounting practices, it loses clients—railroads and savings and loans in the Andersen case—a situation that accountants face at one time or another.

Nor is an Arthur Andersen auditor in the field expected to show independence. Field auditors are closely supervised by a chain of command that reaches from the Client, Milan, Italy, and on any other of the 105 Andersen offices in 35 countries all the way to the 35th floor of the Brunswick Building in downtown Chicago.

If an auditor on the scene can't find a precedent for a situation, he consults the firm's past responses, the word goes up the chain of command to the senior partners in Chicago. They promise an answer within 24 hours. And a new memo goes into the files.

Oh yes, about that annual report. It carries the caveat that "information outside our organization is not permitted without the consent of the managing partner of your office."

The latest public issue that has led Mr. Kapnick to strap on his guns is an S.E.C. pronouncement requiring auditors to give their opinion, in writing, as to whether a client company's change to a different accounting method is the one "preferred" by the auditor.

The S.E.C. has declared, in effect, that the F.A.S.B.'s rules are the only acceptable accounting methods under United States securities laws.

"The S.E.C. made the most sweeping rule in the history of government regulation when it said that," Mr. Kapnick contends heatedly. He charged that the commission violated the law by delegating its authority to make accounting rules to the F.A.S.B. without first conducting public hearings.

"There's a world of difference between independent auditors voluntarily following the pronouncements of a professional board and those same auditors being required by law to do so," Mr. Kapnick snapped.

His peers in the profession disagree.

"We've got to have a pretty high opinion of Arthur Andersen because it's very tough competition," said Joseph P. Cummings, deputy senior partner Peat Marwick in New York City. "But I have some reservations about their techniques. I think they would do better to work with the profession and the business community rather than independently, as they usually do."

"On the F.A.S.B. issue, I think they've hurt our whole effort to keep the standards setting function in the private sector rather than letting it fall under the control of a government agency, with all the political ramifications that involves."

Mr. Kapnick says "Our complaint isn't with the concept of the F.A.S.B. but the leadership," and he insists that he is trying to help, not kill, the board.

Marshall Armstrong, chairman of the F.A.S.B., said last week "Everyone is well aware of Mr. Kapnick's criticism of my personal leadership and of the board itself. And I won't comment on that. But I will say that we believe strongly that we are putting in place a private sector standards setting body that will be useful to the profession for many years to come. And we need the support of the S.E.C. to do so."

The board itself said it probably couldn't survive if the Andersen position prevailed. And if the F.A.S.B. is nervous about the Chicago accounting giant, it might be excused. Its predecessor, the Accounting Principles Board, manned by a group of unpaid volunteers, was brought down three years ago in a storm of criticism, notably from Mr. Kapnick's firm.

No one in the know doubts that Andersen would go to court to fight the S.E.C. if it finds it can't win by persuasion, and that prospect in itself is close to astounding in the somber world of public accounting.

It would be completely astounding except for the fact that the S.E.C. has once before and only once—been sued by an accounting firm—Arthur Andersen, in 1973. The S.E.C. later changed its mind on the rule involved.

Dick Griffin is a financial writer based in Chicago.

estate investment trusts and holdings of New York City obligations. They have been the focal point for much of the recent restructuring of debt—that is, the renegotiation of rates, amounts and lifespans of existing debt—and then led to accountants' concern that present reporting might not adequately reflect the status of the assets.

At major New York banks, holdings of city and Big Mac debt runs about $2 billion. Adoption of the revised accounting method suggested in the discussion memorandum would force a write-down of about 40 percent of that, or close to $800 million.

The level of REIT loans is less certain, but bank analysts place it at about $3.5 billion. Of this, probably 80 percent is currently on a "cash basis" (not producing any interest) or is earning a much lower rate than that originally set. Analysts believe that at New York banks, the loss of interest income alone might run to some $200 million annually, and that the REIT problem will take three years to work out.

Thus, under the accounting method suggested in the F.A.S.B. memorandum, an immediate charge of $600 million or so to income could be necessary.

What the F.A.S.B. has done is to suggest that "current value" accounting could be adopted for those portions of a bank's portfolio which have been subject to formal restructuring.

Traditionally, banks have used historical cost accounting for reporting the value of loans and investments, charging off accounts they consider non-collectible.

As no formal market exists in which bank loans can be priced, it is difficult to apply a value for an asset after a restructuring. But the F.A.S.B. has three separate current value approaches to suggest. All three would require that a bank take the flow of interest income and principal under the restructured loan agreements and compare it with a "carrying cost" based on one of three interest rates:

1. The contract rate in the original loan agreement.

2. The anticipated cost of funds to the bank over the life of the loan.

3. The rate at which "comparable" loans are being initiated at the time of the restructuring.

In all cases, the bank then would have to charge off—to operating income, loan loss reserves or equity capital—the difference between the "carrying cost" and the interest and principal expected from the loan.

On bond market investments where the borrower's original commitments have been adjusted, the banks would be required to carry the bonds at current market price, if a reliable market exists, even if management firmly believes the full cost of the obligation can be recovered over time.

Much of the objection to the possible application of current value accounting in the area of restructured debt is based on what is seen as a piecemeal approach to its adoption across a broad spectrum of business accounting questions. An earlier example of the piecemeal argument came when the REIT's got into deep financial trouble and were forced by the F.A.S.B. into current value practices.

Also, accounting methods are supposed to make corporate reports more informative for the investors and analysts who use them. But both the Financial Analysts Federation and the Bank and Financial Analysts Association have argued that adoption of current value techniques suggested in the latest memorandum would make balance sheets and income statements less understandable, at least to the non-professional investor.

Warren Marcus of Salomon Brothers, who is to present the B.F.A.A. position at the hearings, suggests a compromise—that current value data be included in statements, but as a supplement only.

Beyond those objections lie even more basic arguments.

Walter B. Wriston, for one, chairman of Citicorp, New York's largest banking company, is concerned with the impact of the suggested accounting change on banking's very willingness to grant longer-term credits in terms of municipal and Treasury bond purchases as well as loans.

"If the current direction in which the accounting profession is headed is followed to its logical extreme," Mr. Wriston said in a recent speech, "the impact on our country over time on investment, on state and municipal financing, on home financing from savings-and-loan associations, on obtaining insurance coverage and on the ability of banks and the financial intermediaries to stick with their customers during the next recession will be far more important than any new technical triumphs we encounter along the way."

Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, said in a letter to the F.A.S.B. that central bank was "deeply concerned" that the adoption of current value accounting "could undermine the ability of [financial] institutions to function effectively, thereby impeding the performance of the economy generally."

Other reactions received by the board were even more pithy. As Stallings Ljoford, president of the First-Citizens National Bank of Dyersburg, Tenn., put it in comment #348, the F.A.S.B. proposal is "the most asinine, bird-brained thing I ever heard."

ter, Glynda, who is a nurse in Kansas City.

The giant Deere machines are all painted green and decorated with the company's symbol, the yellow running deer. Mr. Deems wears green pants and a yellow shirt, with a green deer on his collar. His wife wears deer earrings.

That kind of loyalty probably helps Deere & Company, which for the six months ended April 30 reported net income of $130 million, 47 percent ahead of the year before and within range of the record $179 million earned in all fiscal 1975.

Fortunately, for Deere and Mr. Deems,

"the farmers say they never have enough. They always need a different machine than they've got," the dealer says, and a tractor today, which doesn't do anything by itself but pulls other tools, can cost as much as $51,000 with air conditioning and stereo, power steering and brakes, movable steering wheel and swivel seat.

For example, Jack Clawson lives in Kansas City and has a digital computer company there. But he recently started running a 1,500 acre farm in Bates county here, spent $50,000 for implements and then came back to Mr. Deems asking what should he buy with an extra $30,000.

Then there's Leland Dirks, a Mennonite with a 1,000 acre farm here, and another 1,300 acre farm in Colorado. His combine and attachments cost $58,000, including air conditioning and four-wheel drive (which added $6,000 to the price) but without stereo because of his religion.

"We've got some of the worst wheat cut," said Mr. Dirks' oldest son, talking of frost damaged crop that yielded only 20 bushels to the acre, while the average in the area is closer to 30 to 40 bushels to the acre. The senior Dirks just loaded his machines on a trailer truck, harvested the Colorado land and returned. He worked with Marvin Oerke, who owns 2,000 acres here with swimming pool and 3,000 acres more in Texas. Later the pair will harvest Mr. Oerke's in Texas. Most farmers here don't share their equipment since they're all doing the same job at the same time.

Whenever a customer asks about a machine or offers one for trade—used machine or offers one for trade—used business—Mr. Deems notes all the information on a card. Later he visits the farm to price any trade.

"I put the card in my shirt pocket. That's my brain," he says.

His dealership has a parts department, of course, and he also sells nuts and bolts and screws and tools and batteries and bicycles and lawn mowers as well and green and yellow paint to spruce up the Deere machines.

Service is a big part of the business and part of Mr. Deems' day is making house calls for sales, for talk and for service: "If the machine breaks down we come out and pick 'em up. We have three different trucks so we can handle anything we sell."

Mr. Deems graduated from Butler high school, was a paratrooper in World War II, and has done without much formal vacation in three decades since. There was one 16-day European trip he and his wife took, and every year there's the trip to the convention of the National Power and Farm Equipment Dealers Association. Last year it was in Honolulu and the entire family went, but this year it's in St. Louis and only he and his wife will go.

In Butler they live in a tall, white four bedroom frame house in a neighborhood that was pasture when the home was built 13 years ago. There are two cars, a Cadillac and a Ford LTD. Mr. Deems is a member and former president of the Lions Club, plays a little golf and a little bridge, belongs to the country club, and is on the board of the Butler State Bank ("Some that has got it here," reads the bank's motto).

Back at the store the implement seller gets up from his desk to shake hands with a farmer who comes in.

"That's the first time you've shaken my hand in 10 years," the farmer says.

"I'm getting mighty friendly. I heard you wanted an $430 (that's a $43,000 tractor)," the dealer says. "When you got time to talk?"

"What comes first, talk or money?"

"Talk first, then the signed order. We'll worry about the money later," says Leland C. Deems.

brands as Lay's potato chips, Fritos and Chees-its.

Coca-Cola, while it has diversified somewhat, mostly into other beverages like Minute Maid orange juice and Butter-Nut coffee, is far more heavily focused on its soft drinks.

Pepsi took a big leap in size in 1965 when it merged with Frito-Lay Inc., the snack food manufacturer.

Mr. Kendall is fond of saying that he agreed to the merger so he could put more salt in the snacks and thereby consumer thirst—and need for Pepsi.

By one other account, however, which Mr. Kendall denies, the real reason was far more sobering—the friendly merger with Frito-Lay forestalled the potential threat of an unfriendly takeover by a corporate raider. "It gave Kendall some full nights of sleep," said one ex-Pepsi official.

Mr. Kendall says the only other company to show an interest in Pepsi was CBS Inc., and that after he told William S. Paley, chairman of CBS, that he wasn't interested in a corporate marriage, "that was the end of it."

The merger with Frito-Lay, Mr. Kendall says, added management strengths—especially financial controls—as well as marketing experience in the south.

Pepsi's other big spurt in growth came in 1970 when it acquired the Wilson Sporting Goods Company from Ling-Temco-Vought Inc. Wilson, which manufactures golf, baseball, tennis, football, basketball and other athletic equipment, accounted for about one-tenth of PepsiCo's sales and earnings last year.

PepsiCo is also in the transportation business, with North American Van Lines, the moving company. But it is in the process of disposing of most of its vehicle leasing operations, one of the company's few significant failures in recent years.

Monsieur Henri, an importer of wines and other alcoholic beverages including the Russian vodka Stolichnaya is PepsiCo's other major line of business.

Analysts and former Pepsi executives give Mr. Kendall generally high marks for the way he has run PepsiCo since taking it over in 1963, even though he clearly followed a good act.

One of his predecessors, Alfred N. Steele, was a legend in the soft drink business, and is credited with making Pepsi a major factor in the market.

When Mr. Steele died in 1959, his widow, Joan Crawford, became identified as Pepsi's leading spokesman, even though she had only a small minority of shares of the company's stock.

A well-publicized feud between Miss Crawford and Mr. Kendall—apparently over who deserved the major limelight—simmered for years before she was phased out of the operation. At the height of the bitterness, she began referring to Mr. Kendall as "fang," according to one of her associates.

Today, Mr. Kendall shrugs off such talk, and points to Pepsi's accomplishments in the market place, including its highly-publicized ventures in the Soviet Union, where it expects to announce soon the construction of two new bottling plants, one of them in Moscow.

Much of Mr. Kendall's time these days is spent flying off to remote corners of the world on Pepsi's behalf. Early in May, for example, he met with Soviet trade ministers to settle details on the Moscow plant. Soon after, he toured Pepsi facilities in Iran, Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Egypt, an area very important to Pepsi, he says.

Asked about the company's absence from Israel (Coca has bottling operations there and as a result has been boycotted in Arab states), Mr. Kendall said:

"There is no desire from their [Israel's] standpoint for us to go into that market. It's a small one and it's saturated. There's nothing there for us."

After his trip to the Middle East, Mr. Kendall flew to Japan, which he says is Pepsi's "biggest problem area." The cola business generally has been suffering in Japan from attacks by critics of the so-called "black drinks." The growth of other flavored drinks, and a general over-expansion of bottling facilities, have also hurt.

In addition, Pepsi's snack food business in Japan has lagged, largely because the company has not been able to employ its traditional factory-to-retailer delivery methods. The Japanese technique is to sell through wholesalers.

Other problems confronting the company are being resolved, Mr. Kendall said, but "in Japan, the solution is not at hand."

Securities analysts on Wall Street are taking a generally benign view of the PepsiCo (per-share earnings climbed 33.3 percent in the second quarter), although there is some skepticism over the profitability of new foreign operations of soft drink companies generally.

Jeffrey M. Weingarten of Wertheim & Company, pointed out last year in an analysis of the worldwide soft drink industry that "costs associated with developing markets in Eastern Europe and the Far and Middle East are likely to prevent their reaching even average levels of profitability for some time."

PepsiCo is not without its critics. The "junk food" label, for example, is a persistent one.

"There's nothing that gets my hackles up more than that," said Mr. Kendall. "What could be more nutritious than potatoes and corn?" he said of the Frito-Lay line. In the late 1960's, in fact, he backed out of a White House conference on nutrition in protest of remarks critical of snack foods made by Dr. Jean Mayer, organizer of the meeting.

While Mr. Kendall is the executive most closely identified in the public eye with Pepsi, the day-to-day running of the company is handled to a large extent by Andrall E. Pearson, president and chief operating officer.

Mr. Pearson, a 51-year-old former management consultant from McKinsey & Company who joined Pepsi in 1970, plays "Mister Inside" to his boss's "Mister Outside."

Typically, Mr. Kendall was rousing off the other day to Washington to lunch with Helmut Schmidt, the chancellor of West Germany, and Mr. Pearson had just returned from a tour of stores in Queens, the Bronx and New Jersey, where he was getting a first-hand look at displays of PepsiCo products.

One other name also invariably comes up when former Pepsi managers reminisce. It is Cartha D. (Deke) DeLoach, former right hand man to J. Edgar Hoover at the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Mr. DeLoach served as President Lyndon Johnson's personal liaison with the F.B.I. at one point conveying to Mr. Johnson information on the wire tapping of Expert judgment in municipal bonds.

Our municipal bond portfolio planning kit could save you thousands.

People who do not take the time to fully understand municipal bonds very often buy bonds that are not right for them. Assuming they are satisfied with the rating, they simply reach for the highest yields they can find. And that is one of the most common and most costly mistakes municipal bond buyers make, particularly new buyers. Because almost without exception this means long term bonds and one of the municipal bond funds which consist entirely of long bonds. And while these may be right for some people there's a good chance you're not one of them.

Understanding municipals means knowing the relative advantages and disadvantages of premium and par bonds, discount bonds, long term bonds and short term bonds so that you can decide how to select bonds that offer the combination of coupon, yield, and maturity most suitable to your investment goals.

That's what our Municipal Bond Portfolio Planning Kit does. In it we tell you about a few different people with fairly typical investment objectives. Then we show you how we would construct a model portfolio for each, explain the reasons why and give you the results in dollars and cents.

All you have to do is compare your own situation to one of the models and you will get a good understanding of the type of municipal bond most suitable for you and why.

Our Municipal Bond Portfolio Planning Kit is easy to understand, very educational and it's free but to a municipal bond buyer it could mean thousands.

Kendall: Blunt and Politically Minded

A Friend, He Offered Nixon a Job After 1960

In visiting the Soviet bottling works, or in naming Diet Pepsi, the chief executive leaves his personal stamp on operations.

PURCHASE, N.Y. — Donald M. Kendall, 55 years old, who earns $440,000 a year as chief executive of PepsiCo Inc., was standing on a dais at Western Kentucky University, his alma mater, in May, 1972, delivering the commencement address.

It was a typical sampling of Kendall's particular blend of business, politics, and somewhat heavy-handed humor.

"One of the first things I saw when arriving here was the Coca-Cola vending machine," he said. Pause. "And I didn't particularly consider that a friendly act."

"Furthermore," he said, the athletic director had shown him the basketball used by the college team, made by "our competitor Spalding."

Turning to politics, Mr. Kendall observed that Senator George McGovern had been "trying to improve his position on Vietnam" by surveying the American Indians to see how they felt on the subject.

"He got back some very strange results," said Mr. Kendall. Fifteen percent think we should get out of Vietnam, and 85 percent think we should get out of the United States."

Mr. Kendall then mentioned that he had been awarded an honorary doctorate the previous year by Stetson University in Florida.

"It was quite natural for me therefore to expect that on this occasion my own Western Kentucky University might follow suit," he said. "Unfortunately for me, Western Kentucky has kept a record of my scholastic achievements. And I can only say that I am deeply grateful that a transcript of those grades was never sent to Stetson."

According to observers, the performance illustrated both Mr. Kendall's methods and his personality.

He tends, by most accounts, to be a man's man — bluff, outgoing, hearty.

"Kendall is a big bear," said one former Pepsi executive. "He's blunt and abrasive, and he's so tough that he can be intimidating in a one-on-one situation."

The son of a dairy farmer from the hamlet of Sequim (pronounced squim), Wash., Mr. Kendall has scaled the corporate ladder not so much by virtue of cerebral accomplishment as by sheer drive and ambition.

An indifferent student as a youth, he played on two championship football teams at Sequim High School, drove a milk truck after graduation, and later matriculated for one year at Western Kentucky State Teachers College, as it was then known, in Bowling Green. His mother had relocated there after divorcing his father and remarrying.

Navy service followed, including flight training at Corpus Christi, Tex., where in 1945 he wooed and won his first wife, the former Ann McDonnell, daughter of the chief of staff at the base.

That marriage broke up in the early 1960's, and in 1965 Mr. Kendall married the Baroness Ruedt von Collenberg. She had been introduced to Mr. Kendall by a Pepsi bottler in West Germany.

Over the years, Mr. Kendall has made a point of staying well-connected politically. Indeed, he philosophizes that one of the major tasks of a corporate chief executive is to create a "political and economic climate" conducive to profitable business operations.

A close friend of former President Nixon (Mr. Kendall's messager loosened the Nixon back muscles at the 1972 Republican convention), the Pepsi chief tried to hire Mr. Nixon to head Pepsi's international operations after his defeat by John Kennedy in 1960. Mr. Nixon decided to practice law instead and Pepsi became one of his biggest clients.

Today, Mr. Kendall remains in close touch with Mr. Nixon. He called him after Pat Nixon's recent stroke, and has a golf and dinner date with the former President later this month.

Mr. Nixon, while President, named Mr. Kendall to several important committees, and he played the piano at the Pepsi chief's wedding reception in 1965 at the Hotel Pierre.

Mr. Kendall's rise at Pepsi was swift. He joined the company in 1947 as a fountain syrup salesman and 10 years later was named president of Pepsi's overseas operations.

His relative youth was never a problem, partly because he always looked older than his age. High school classmates recall that in addition to being a fast-talker, he had grey hair at the age of 17.

By 1963 Mr. Kendall had been named president of the Pepsi-Cola Company, and in 1965 he engineered the merger with Frito-Lay that resulted in PepsiCo Inc., remaining chief executive of the merged organizations.

One of his personal contributions in recent years was the naming of Diet Pepsi. Hardly as simple a choice as it might seem, the decision involved such alternate strategies as whether to create a wholly different name, as Coca-Cola did with Tab, or possibly to combine some new name with the word Pepsi.

Do Not Steal the Patents

By STACY V. JONES

WASHINGTON — Visitors have always walked pretty freely among the files of the United States Patent Office. No more.

Soon they will have to show passes as they enter the public search room in the offices at Crystal City, Va., a nearby suburb of Washington. They will also have to follow designated lanes entering and leaving the area, and on the way out they will be scanned by electronic sensing equipment.

If a marked document is detected, in a briefcase, say, or under someone's clothes, an alarm will sound and a gate on the exit lane will be locked. Unless the matter is satisfactorily explained, there may be seizure of the said briefcase or detention of the visitor.

The reason for this upsurge in security-consciousness is that the patent agency, recently renamed the Patent and Trademark Office, has one of the world's largest collections of technological literature, its search file comprises 11 million American patent documents and nearly as many issued abroad.

Disappearing documents give rise to new security consciousness.

Why Holt pinpoints selected... Utility Stocks Yielding Over 9%

...Not only for high current income but long-term capital growth potential too

It is not at all surprising that many knowing investors are now looking into utility stocks with intensifying interest.

For this particular group of stocks, the bear market started way back in 1965, when the Dow Jones utility index began a 9-year decline that erased nearly 65% of its value.

The result of these cross-trends is that a number of stocks in this power group now yield over 9%. But high yields alone are not enough, says T.J. Holt.

Power Play: Without doubt, the industry has been confronted by many problems, including rising fuel cost, regulatory and environmental red tape, and lofty interest rates.

Specific Recommendations: Holt's latest report on the Electric Utility Industry carefully documents why we think the worst is over for the industry and why unusual opportunities have emerged in this group.

American Natural's Future Look Consolidated Trading for N.Y.S.E. Is

WEEK ENDED JULY 23, 1976

By ALLAN SLOAN

DETROIT — Two months ago the American Natural Gas Company became the American Natural Resources Company. It's not that the Detroit-based company is up to its pipeline in natural resources; it's just that executives know they'd better start looking for additional business because there isn't that much gas.

"We'd be crazy not to look for other business," says Wilber H. (Deke) Mack, the blunt-talking chairman of the executive committee. It's not that they are abandoning gas: "We're going to stay in the gas business until hell won't have it," he says. But the goal is to produce 25 percent to 35 percent of the company's profits from non-gas operations in a decade.

"While we foresee very large increases in our plant investment—and therefore our earnings—over the next 10 years, we don't foresee any large increases in gas supply," says Arthur Seder Jr., the utility's chairman and president. "This means our increases would have to come from rate increases," he said. "We think that's not a satisfactory situation."

Ambitious young men and women would not want to go to work for a company that doesn't have prospects for growth in volume," said Mr. Seder, who succeeded the 65-year-old Mr. Mack as corporate chairman this month.

Arthur R. Seder Jr., chairman of American Natural Resources Company, plans to keep gas sales at current levels.

Results for 1974 and 1975 include the Wisconsin Natural Gas Company, whose stock was distributed to American Natural shareholders when American Natural was reorganized in June 1975. American Natural Gas officially changed its name to American Natural Resources on May 7, 1976.

with producers while Mr. Seder, less flamboyant and more tactful, specialized in negotiating with regulators. American Natural was one of the first companies to begin planning to get gas from the Canadian Arctic, one of the first to make advance payments to gas producers in exchange for committing gas supplies, and one of the first to set up large storage fields, allowing it to store gas in the summer and sell at top prices in the winter. Other gas companies sold gas to so-called "inter-uptible" customers—their gas may be cut off if needed elsewhere—at cheap rates during the summer, rather than investing in storage facilities.

Michigan's three other major utilities—Consumers Power Company, Detroit Edison Company and Michigan Bell Telephone Company—also complain constantly about "unsympathetic" regulation, and all three have filed court appeals of recent Michigan Public Service Commission decisions. American Natural's Michigan Consolidated Gas, on the other hand, has quietly negotiated settlements with the state and other opponents in the last two rate increase cases. The company earns its allowed profit margin or more every year, while the other three regularly earn much less than their authorized profit.

"Michigan Consolidated knows where it's at," says Roderick S. Coy, an assistant attorney general who represents the state attorney general during rate cases, and unlike the other companies, understands the difference between the amount of

Keeping a Low Profile

Even though American Natural is the most successful major utility in Michigan, its profile in its home state is so low as to be almost invisible.

The company's 32-story headquarters building in downtown Detroit is the Michigan Consolidated Gas Company Building, not the American Natural Building.

Until May, American Natural had never made a presentation to the Financial Analysts Society of Detroit, although it did occasionally make presentations in New York. But even with the presentations, American Natural didn't go out of its way to seek attention. In New York either, according to one New York security analyst. The analyst, who asked that neither he nor his firm be identified, said that for years, he had to call American Natural's New York office every three months to get quarterly financial statements because the company wouldn't mail them to him if he didn't.

But the utility's reluctance to tout its own horn may be diminishing somewhat. In addition to the Detroit presentation in May, the company embarked on a modest financial advertising campaign when it changed its name. That was its first financial advertising campaign ever.

Michigan Consolidated also has had access to gas to sell. Last year, the company sold 11 billion cubic feet—enough to heat 55,000 homes for a year—to two interstate pipelines serving Ohio and another pipeline serving the Southeast, and its being selling gas to other Michigan utilities since 1973.

American Natural started in 1938 and entered the pipeline business in the late 1940's because it feared its major gas supplier, Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Company, was cutting back gas deliveries to Michigan Consolidated while trying to take over some of its industrial customers.

Today, the company owns not only the gas distribution business and Michigan Wisconsin Pipe Line, but half of the Great Lakes Transmission Company, which brings gas from western Canada to eastern Canada and the upper Midwest, and also has its own gas exploration company, and gets 93 percent of its gas from resources it controls.

Consumers Power of Michigan, in contrast, decided to rely on Panhandle which has now cut back deliveries about 40 percent. As a result Consumers were forced to build an expensive synthetic gas plant and its rates are now 30 percent above Michigan Consolidated.

American Natural disposed of the Wisconsin Gas Company last year to gain an exemption from the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1934. The company found it could not sell Wisconsin Gas stock to the public on favorable terms. Instead, American Natural distributed one Wisconsin Gas share for each five shares of American Natural, the equivalent of a 34-cent annual increase in American Natural's dividend, the seventh straight year of increased payouts.

The Public Utility Holding Company Act was a problem, American Natural officials say, because it restricted American Natural to the gas business and forbade the private placement of new securities issues.

Despite its past success and diversifications efforts, there are uncertainties. American Natural has contracts for large quantities of gas from the Canadian Arctic, but the company needs permission from the Canadian National Energy Board to bring the gas out of Canada, and it's not clear if permission will be forthcoming.

American Natural is also seeking Federal loan guarantees to finance its proposed North Dakota gasification plant. The plant is expected to cost about $700 million and to produce 125 million cubic feet of gas a day. Ultimately, American Natural hopes to produce a billion cubic feet of gasified coal a day.

However, American Natural also is affected by the uncertainty over which route will be chosen to ship Alaskan gas to markets in the lower 48 states. American Natural is a prime mover in the proposed Canadian Arctic line, which would bring gas from Alaska and the Canadian Arctic to markets in Canada and the American Midwest—and run close to the proposed North Dakota gasification plant. However, there are competing proposals.

American Natural counts on outside investors to provide hundreds of millions of dollars in coming years. The change in direction is aimed at making its securities more attractive to those investors. "Straight gas companies aren't too attractive anymore," says Ray Lynch, chairman of American Natural's Michigan Wisconsin Pipe Line.

Allan Sloan is a financial reporter for the Detroit Free Press.

Who Would Finance a Xerox Today?

By JOHN P. BIRKELUND

The history of American business is studded with tales of small companies that have grown into large and highly successful ones—in earlier eras, the giants of the aircraft and automobile industries, and more recently, International Business Machines, Eastman Kodak and Xerox, to name a few.

It is obvious that such success stories involve the invention, development, successful production and marketing of products whose times had come. What is perhaps less obvious is that no instance could a small company have grown into a large one if the capital needed for its expansion had not been available to it at the right time.

There has recently been a great deal of discussion about the capital needs of the American economy, present and future. Most of it is based on the premise that there is, or soon will be, a serious shortage. But it is possible to argue that for the next year or two at least, the major problem is not an overall shortage of capital, but rather the way in which capital is allocated. The fact is that access to capital by our smaller and more marginal economic units has become steadily more constricted.

The major trend that has been working against effective allocation is the increasing concentration in the economy—in particular, within our financial nervous system.

Since 1962—an appropriate base year since the nation was then emerging from a recession, as it was in 1975—deposits of the 10 largest banks in the United States have risen from 20 percent of the total bank deposits in 1962 to 33 percent in 1975.

Equity investments in this country are subject to the same kind of concentration. Pension fund assets have tripled since 1962. Mutual fund assets have doubled. And the individual shareholder population, according to the New York Stock Exchange has declined 18 percent in just the past five years.

Furthermore, throughout this period there has been a disturbing concentration in the securities distribution network. The number of securities firms registered with the National Association of Securities Dealers shrank from 4,800 in 1962 to 2,900 in 1975, impairing the efficiency of the selling effort.

Obviously, savings in this country are flowing into fewer and fewer hands and fewer and fewer people are making investment decisions.

The causes of this remarkable shift are manifold. One, of course, is the inflation of recent years, which has seriously eroded corporate profits and imposed severe strain on our financial institutions. Along with it came dramatically declining stock prices, causing serious losses to most individual shareholders. It is small wonder that so many individuals abandoned both direct stock ownership and mutual funds.

The trauma of these years, combined with the increased concentration in our financial institutions, has particularly affected our smaller and more marginal companies.

The evidence can be seen in the stock market. The article "on mopeds" in the Value Line Index of 1,500 Big Board, American Stock Exchange and over-the-counter stocks which, unlike the Big Board's Dow Jones averages or Standard & Poor's "500," weighs each company equally, was at 88 at year-end 1962—and at the same figure at year-end 1975. During the same period, the Dow Jones industrial average had risen—with interruptions—some 50 percent.

Volume on the American Stock Exchange, whose listings are basically comprised of small companies, provides further confirmation of the trend. Amex volume today is running at only 10 to 15 percent of Big Board volume. In the 1960's, it averaged 25 to 30 percent.

A similar situation prevails in our bond market. A rush for quality has left behind all the lower-quality issues. In 1962, the average spread between yields of Aaa and Baa corporate bonds was only 65 basis points; in 1975, it had increased to more than 150 basis points.

As the savings stream has flowed more and more into large banks and large institutions, there has been a corresponding tendency to take fewer risks.

Large institutions are conservative—partly by their very nature, partly because they have had some disturbing experiences, and partly because they are subject to external pressures. In recent years, many have been afflicted by over-extension and sharply higher loss experience. One of the more far reaching external pressures is inherent in the recently enacted Employee Retirement Income Security Act, which defines fiduciary responsibilities for pension funds and imposes as-yet-to-be-defined quality standards on investments.

Clearly the trend toward concentration in the financial markets results in part from circumstances that cannot readily be controlled, such as inflation and the recent recession.

But equally clearly, it has many some elements that can be controlled.

One is the tax structure. The incentive is good, and judgment under discussion in Congress. The Democratic administration expressed in the Democratic and Jimmy Carter's acceptance of their erosion may well be in a

Until 1975, the Federal corporate rate was set at a maximum while the top bracket for ordinary income was as high as 70 percent; thus tentatively a spread of as much as 50 percent between the two rates. Today, Federal tax on earned income 50 percent, while the maximum rate has been hatched up to excess of 35 percent, leaving little as 15 percent, or less between the two.

Every one of the so-called tax and tax reform proposals that emerged would serve to narrow further or abolish it altogether.

If smaller companies are to be encouraged to grow, there must be risk-taking on the part of investors. Our tax system, however, is moving us in the opposite direction.

Another serious problem is rapid expansion of the market options. Almost every stock country is today promoting a sense of its speculative content. The speculative appeal to individuals is about 175 issues of are written and traded—off of major corporations. Op'd siphoned off speculative and a sterile gambling operation which are themselves already institutions.

Still a third problem has been referred to. It is posed by the Act. No one would dispute need for such legislation, but legislating into statute what common law standard of fid has opened up a vast new area. And again, small marginal companies which had the fringe of fiduciary ac- been the principal casualties.

Gristly Problem

To the Financial Editor:
The article "on mopeds" in the "Two Wheels and a Putt-Putt" (July 11) quotes Anthony J. Parenti, president of the New Jersey Police Traffic Officers' Association, as stating that if the moped is not regulated... "it'll become a grizzly statistic."

Clearly, Mr. Parenti was felt to be bearish on these vehicles. If he were still chewing the problem over, he no doubt would have described the situation as "grizzly."

As for me, the current butchery of words is an all too grizzly phenomenon.

Carter's Budget

To the Financial Editor:
In "The Contradictions in Carter's Budget Policy" (July 11) the question is raised as to how Jimmy Carter would pay for all his public benefit programs and still balance the budget.

It would not take long to find out that our budget policy of today is providing more than a hundred billion dollars for defense purposes in which an outrageous amount of waste (not to mention payoffs) is involved, benefiting very few. If it were diverted to public programs, it would benefit millions. If our government would spend wisely, our nation could accomplish much.

TERRENCE KENNEDY
New York
July 15, 1976

Undertaking new programs included in the Democratic platform need not contradict a balanced budget, if a zero-base budget approach is used. The traditional approach to budgeting normally implies adding new programs on top of old ones, thus bigger spending.

The essence of zero-based budgeting is to make priority trade-offs among programs.

Housing

To the Financial Editor:
Builders bemoan "new environmental protection regulations" as stifling new construction and raising the cost of new homes beyond the reach of most potential buyers ("How Government is Pushing Up the Cost of Housing" July 18). But our cities and older suburbs are filled with solid old housing stock. In many areas, this housing is being allowed to decay, in part because of the preference by lending institutions for new construction. As demonstrated by the brownstone revivals in downtown Brooklyn and elsewhere, this old housing can be reclaimed, to fulfill the American dream for yet another generation of young American families.

And while the profits for the new housing builders may decline, businessmen who choose to service the old housing market will prosper.

Batteries

To the Financial Editor:
Frank L. Rosen ("Letters: Electric Cars" July 18) asks, why batteries for electric cars have not improved much in 60 years. The answer lies in the formidable problems presented by such improvement.

Lead acid batteries, the type used in today's electric cars, are about as good as they can get. The most optimistic projection for theoretical improvement is 50 percent in energy density. Since nobody has the slightest idea of how to implement the theoretical improvement, this still leaves gasoline 50 times as energetic as available batteries.

Well over $100 million has

Arms Danger

To the Financial Editor:
The specter of Vietnam continues to haunt this nation's collective conscience. Moral inertia has allowed the Pentagon and the arms industry to gain an even greater dominance as witnessed by the new record military budget.

Obviously, the 1,200 former Pentagon officials who now work for the arms industry (mostly as lobbyists) have paid off many times over. As reported in "All Systems Are Go for the Arms Makers" (May 16) "the outlook for the United States military production industries is more cheerful today than in years."

And if this were not enough, the Pentagon is seeking ways to insure even greater profits for the weapons makers through a program entitled "Profits 76." Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, correctly calls this program "one of the biggest ripoffs the taxpayer has ever suffered."

President Eisenhower, back in 1960, warned the American people of a dangerous new force, the "military-industrial complex." The destructive influence of this entity, including the bribes, cost overruns, programmed weapons obsolescence, and extreme profits, makes its dissolution a prerequisite toward achieving a major change in national priorities.

Going on TV

To the Financial Editor:
The point in "Businessmen Can Look Better if They Try" (July 18) is well taken. Businessmen have plenty of room for improvement—in both basic press relations and more particularly in handling television interviews.

But one shouldn't go too hard on businessmen. Keep in mind two things:

For most businessmen, being interviewed is not an everyday occurrence. A certain amount of anxiety and stiffness in an unfamiliar environment is not altogether unreasonable.

What makes a network business news story is, of course real news. More often than not, that means something negative, such as a strike, a plant disaster or an adverse government ruling. The executive, under the circumstances, has to feel a little defensive.

up the prices. More than 90 percent of acres changing hands were for agriculture. In the statistical period, the national average for an acre rose from $354 to $403, and that included a lot of marginal land. This brought the total paper value of American farm land to $421 billion, with the average operating farm going for $165,000. That's only the average. This month the better corn and soybean land in Iowa or Illinois will cost $2,500 to $3,000 an acre. With most Midwestern farms now running from 500 to 1,000 acres, this means a lot of farmers around here are now millionaires—on paper at least.

Fire Engine Makers Are Burning

Fire—arson and accident—may be booming but the fire truck manufacturers complain that they are getting burned. "High price escalation has hurt major manufacturers in the last 2 years," said Richard Kendall of State Line Fire and Safety Inc., a distributor of fire and safety equipment in the New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. "A company that is delivering a truck valued today at $75,000 probably contracted to make it two years for about $55,000." Earnings of the Fire Protection Safety and Security division of A-T-O Inc., which includes American LaFrance, the largest fire engine maker with a fifth of the market, dropped 40 percent in 1975. Mack Trucks, a unit of the Signal companies and another major manufacturer, showed a 65 percent drop for the year. Sales during the last three years remained relatively steady. Most communities are reticent or prohibited by law to accept inflation adjustment clauses in their purchase contracts so manufacturers are forced to swallow the cost increases on engines that may cost as much as $100,000.

rock concerts because they want the money." Although the business is good, the beginning promoter can have troubles. "It's a very good year," says Larry Magid of Electric Factory Concerts in Philadelphia, "but only for the big established promoters. I know a lot of guys who tried concerts for the first time this year and really got burned. You need a lot of nerve to get into this business and good business sense and a reserve in case the money doesn't come in."

The Mercedes You Can't Buy

Alas, the finest Mercedes built, and one of the most expensive automobiles built, is being denied to Americans. The car is the new 6.9 liter model, which cruises in at $30,000 to $40,000 and was to be brought into the United States this spring, but didn't come. Mercedes now plans to import it next spring.

Why deprive America's millionaires until next year? Mercedes blames the United States Government's safety standards. Among other rules there's one calling for fixed bumper heights. The aim of this is to keep the rear bumper of a Chevy, for example, from poking into the grille of a Ford. It doesn't have much to do with safety, but aims to keep repair costs down. The trouble with the super-luxury Mercedes 6.9 is that the car can raise or lower itself, which allows plenty of ground clearance for Arab potentates who like to run over the Saudi landscape. The trouble is that if the car can go up and down, the bumper height isn't fixed (a violation of American law) and both heights must pass an impact requirement. So, the American version of the 6.9 when it finally comes will glide along at only one height. Of course, the German company's business is still strong in this country—21,976 sales through June matching last year's figure. And the shipments scheduled for the United States for the remainder of the year are sold out now.

Small Shot

Andy Warhol found his in Donn Arman, the French artist, scoured Paris for his. And by December 31, if the sales boom continues, 20,000 Americans will also own a Minox 35 EL, the smallest (178 cubic centimeters), lightest (less than 7 ounces), full-frame, 35 millimeter camera in the world.

It is also the hardest-to-find camera in town. As Minoxes go this is the largest—4 inches long, 2 1/2 inches high, 1 1/2 inches deep—ever made. Minox became world famous in 1938 for its miniature "spy" camera, 3 inches long and shaped like a Mounds candy bar. The original Latvian factory was destroyed during World War II so Minox moved to Glessen, West Germany. There the newest Minox was developed using a glass fiber reinforced plastic for the body. There's a built-in, light sensitive exposure meter that automatically adjusts the shutter speed from 1/500th of a second to one second. The camera harks back to the 1820's accordion-fold front models for its shape:

a hinged panel flips down revealing the view finder and the lens which slides forward. The $183 suggested list price is being discounted to as low as $135 in New York.

"It's not a gimmick program. We're being professional in establishing criteria. But we are finding that most of the hundreds of people submitting applications are in compliance," says Paul Reed, vice president of marketing and planning. The program began July 6. To qualify, the borrower must have a checking account with Seattle Trust and meet the energy criteria. New homes, for instance, must have ceilings, walls and floor insulation, storm windows, window and door weather stripping and a 75 percent efficient furnace. In home remodeling, with improvements such as insulating and re-roofing, borrowers will qualify for an 8 1/2 percent annual rate with up to 10 years to repay, down from the 9.5 standard rate. Also available at 8 1/2 percent, down from the 9.5 percent rate, are four year loans on new cars that get at least 25 miles per gallon on the highway and 10 year loans for energy-efficient power boats, sailboats and canoes.

WASHINGTON REPORT

can no longer make agreements of almost any kind with foreign countries with any assurance that they will, in fact, be honored by the United States. In the sweeping trade law finally passed in late 1974 Congress adopted a number of provisions for a Congressional veto, or override, of Presidential decisions. The handbag case may be the first test of one of those provisions. In amending the long-standing countervailing duty section of the law, Congress gave the Secretary of the Treasury the right to waive imposition of countervailing duties, even when he found foreign subsidies, if certain conditions were met. But Congress also provided that either House could overturn such a decision, in which case the special duties would have to be retained or imposed. The National Handbag Association and the International Leather Goods, Plastic and Novelty Workers Union, forcefully guided by Stanley Nehmer, a former official of the Commerce Department and now deeply involved in trade matters as a director of economic consulting services for the accounting firm of Wolf and company, has petitioned to Congress for a vote of disapproval of the Simon decision to remove the countervailing duties on Handbags from Brazil.

Representative William J. Green, Democrat of Pennsylvania, and Senator Abraham Ribicoff, Democrat of Connecticut, chairmen of the Trade Subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee, and Senate Ways and Means Committee, have written Mr. Simon letters raising questions as to whether his action was consistent with the new law. The main complaint of the domestic industry, as cited in its petition, is that "the type of situation envisaged for waiving a countervailing duty after it was established was one in which the United States and the foreign government entered into an agreement under which the subsidized exports were limited, not one involving a phasing down over time of the subsidies and an immediate removal of the countervailing duties." The issue may be one of interpretation of the law, and Mr. Simon finally replied to Mr. Green and Mr. Ribicoff last week defending his decision. But either or both may yet initiate a "resolution of disapproval," depending on how persuasive they find Mr. Simon's arguments. There is no deadline and the issue could hang in suspense for months. Mr. Nehmer feels strongly that the Administration has not been administering the new trade law in good faith. He believes that, apart from the handbag case, President Ford's decision against imposing any import restraints on foreign shoes, following a unanimous decision of the United States International Trade Commission that the domestic industry was being injured by imports, was a violation of a pledge made at the time of consideration of the trade bill by William D. Eberle, then the President's special representative for trade negotiations. The important issue in the handbag case is not the merits of either side. A staff official of the Ways and Means Committee, while making no prediction as to whether either House will override Mr. Simon's decision, calls the elimination of the special duties in return only for a phasing out of the Brazilian subsidies "a bit much." Mr. Simon may well have stretched the law, though he does not think so. The real issue is the unpredictability of the conduct of United States foreign relations, economic and political. Though it is not widely known, the United States is already in default in its obligations to make payments to the World Bank and Inter-American Development Bank because of a combination of Congressional delays and actual cuts in the appropriations bills providing the funds to pay the American share of contributions to these organizations. Congress has shown no sign of movement on the $25 billion "safety net" agreement negotiated early last year among the industrial countries, at American initiative, to cope with potential balance of payments crises resulting from the jump in world oil prices. This week the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will begin consideration of United States participation in the new international tin agreement. This will be the first concrete test of the possibility of commodity agreements—so urgently demanded by the less developed countries and accepted as a possibility on a case by case basis by the Administration. Parts of the domestic steel industry are going to oppose the agreement vigorously on the ground that it is just a device to raise the price of tin, and thus ultimately of tinplate used in making cans. The attitude of the Foreign Relations Committee members is not yet clear, but the agreement might well be rejected. If it is rejected, there may be second thoughts around the world as to the usefulness of even trying to negotiate with the United States. Negotiations for a new round of contributions to the World Bank's soft loan affiliate, The International Development Association, are already bedeviled by this problem. It is a baffling one. No one can dispute the right of petition to Congress or the decisive role of Congress under this nation's system of government. But the net result is a sort of non-government, particularly in the foreign relations sphere.

Crawford of Trinidad Wins 100 Dash; Naber Sets Mark in Backstroke Heat

U.S. Star Goes for His Fourth Gold Medal

MONTREAL, July 24—Long John Naber, in pursuit of his fourth gold medal, set an Olympic record in qualifying heats of the 200-meter backstroke today while East German women moved closer to more titles.

The resumption of swimming competition at the Olympic pool, after a one-day respite, failed to change the tone of American dominance in the men's events and East German superiority among the women.

The 6-foot-6-inch Naber, with three golds and a silver already secure, led an American sweep of the top three times in morning trials with a performance of 2 minutes 2.01 seconds. A competitive final tonight could wipe out Naber's 2:00.64 world record and perhaps produce the first sub-two-minute time in the event.

Strong qualifying efforts by Dan Harrigan of Mishawaka, Ind., (2:02.25) and Peter Rocca of Orinda, Calif., (2:03.31) also set up the possibility of the fourth medal sweep by the American men in a final.

The United States men have won every gold medal of the first nine events. A threat to the string came from the Olympic record set by David Wilkie of Britain during heats of the 200-breast-stroke.

Wilkie's time, 2:18.29, was well under the times of the first three American qualifiers, Rick Colella, John Hencken and Charles Keating. But Hencken, who qualified in 2:21.23, won the 100-breast-stroke gold medal earlier in the competition and registered a 2:18.99 earlier this year.

The biggest news among the American women, who are still seeking their first swimming gold medal, was the non-appearance by Shirley Babashoff of Mission Viejo, Calif., in the 400-individual medley.

In an effort to give Miss Babashoff the maximum amount of rest and concentration for tomorrow's 800-freestyle final, Jack Nelson, the United States women's coach, and Mark Schubert, Miss Babashoff's club coach, agreed yesterday to scratch her from the individual medley.

"We felt it was in the best interest of Shirley Babashoff and the team," Nelson said, after Miss Babashoff qualified third in trials of the 800 freestyle behind Petra Thumer of East Germany (who set an Olympic record in 8:46.58) and Nicole Kramer, a teammate.

It has been a frustrating Olympic for the 19-year-old Miss Babashoff. She has swum in the shadows of Kornelia Ender, the East German great, and still is chasing her first gold medal, although she has won two individual silvers and a silver on a relay.

"Shirley wants to win an

Quarrie Is 2d, Borzov in 3d—Time: 10.06

MONTREAL, July 24—Hasely Crawford of Trinidad, a failure in the Olympic 100-meter final in 1972, won the 100-meter dash gold medal today.

In a race of high intensity, Crawford finished inches ahead of Donald Quarrie of Jamaica. Valery Borzov of the Soviet Union, the 1972 champion, finished third and Harvey Glance of Phenix City, Ala., was fourth. When Borzov won the 1972 Olympic 100 final, Crawford failed to finish.

Borzov led for almost half the race. Then Crawford, who has run for years on the American indoor circuit and attended Eastern Michigan University, drove by Borzov. Quarrie was the next to challenge, and he, too, fell just short. Crawford's time was 10.06 seconds.

The other gold-medal winners during the day were Udo Beyer of East Germany in the men's shot-put (69 feet 3/4 inch) and Ruth Fuchs of East Germany in the women's javelin throw (213-5).

The United States was shut out of the medals in the shot-put for the first time since 1936. The highest finisher among the three Americans was Al Fuerbach of San Jose, Calif., fourth with 67-3/4.

America's best women's javelin thrower, Kathy Schmidt of Long Beach, Calif., won the bronze medal for third place as she had in 1972. She just made it, throwing 209-10 on her sixth and last attempt.

Glance Tops Borzov
Glance won the first semifinal of the 100-meter dash, beating Borzov, the legendary Ukrainian. The times were 10.24 seconds for Glance and 10.30 for Borzov. Borzov might have run faster had he not glanced at Glance at 80 meters to see where the American was.

Crawford took the second semifinal in 10.22, with Quarrie second in 10.26 and the 18-year-old Jones third in 10.36. Steve Riddick of Philadelphia finished fifth in 10.33 and failed to reach the final.

There was a slight scare in the 400-meter hurdle semifinals before the three Americans advanced to the final. Mike Shine of Youngsville, Pa., won the first heat in 49.90 seconds, with Quentin Wheeler of Tinton Falls, N.J., fourth, just making the final in 49.22. Ed Moses of Dayton, Ohio, took the second heat by nine meters in 48.29, the third fastest in history, and he remained the favorite for the gold medal.

The Americans hope to sweep the three medals tomorrow, but Wheeler gave them a scare.

"It's hell," he said, "I keep getting that outside lane. I can't take anybody up out there."

Forego Wins Brooklyn Stakes

Forego, the 4-year-old son of Gallant Romeo from the Brooklyn in order to seat him in today's $40,000 added Tom Fool.

Today's program at the Big A, unless there is a change of plans by New York Racing Association officials, will be the last Sunday card of the year.

Seven of the starters in the Brooklyn had won 48 stakes events, collectively. The remaining two—Surf and Dancing Gun—had shown promise of developing into stakes winners on other fronts. Surf is a recent import from Uruguay and Dancing Gun had shown good form in recent appearances in California.

Forego Carries 134
Forego was assigned the highweight of 134 pounds. The impost was heavier than the weight he toted in winning the 1974 Brooklyn (129 pounds) and the 1975 Brooklyn (132). In those two outings, the Lazy F champion had been saddled by Sheriff W. Ward, now retired. Forego now is being trained by Frank Y. Whetsley, Jr.

Yesterday's outing presented Forego, entering the race with career earnings of $1,302,172, with the opportunity of winding up the Handicap Triple series with two legs for the second straight season. In 1975, the son of Forli took the Suburban as well as the Brooklyn.

Any hopes that Lazy F's interests—the stable is owned by Martha F. Gerry of Mill Neck, L.I.—may have had for "the triple" this season were dashed early this month. Forego was beaten by Foolish Pleasure, the 1975 Kentucky Derby winner, by a nose in a three-horse blanket finish in the Suburban.

Also involved in that thrilling Suburban finish was Lord Rebeau, who came home third, only two noses in the wake of Foolish Pleasure. In that event, the 4-year-old

Figueroa Takes 13th, Beating Red Sox

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY
Playing as if September and a pennant race were already upon them, the Yankees put away the Red Sox at Yankee Stadium again yesterday afternoon to further reduce the suspense in the American League East.

With another big crowd on hand—46,925—the Yankees got three runs early, off Rick Jones, Boston's rookie hope, and went on to win, 4-1. It was the 13th victory of the year for Ed Figueroa and the first loss in the majors for Jones.

Figueroa, tied with Jim Palmer of Baltimore for the American League lead in victories, had little trouble with the Red Sox aside from Jim Rice's homer in the eighth inning. Though they got only six hits to Boston's seven, the Yankees made them count.

Yankee heroics, put New York's home attendance past the total for all of 1975. Last year, when they shared Shea Stadium with the Mets, the Yanks drew 1,288,048 in 68 home dates. This year, at the rebuilt stadium, they are more than 15,000 ahead of that total and they still have 29 home dates left.

Today's game had an advance sale of 32,000, most of them coming when it looked as if this weekend's series would be decisive in the American League East. Since the All-Star break,

Being the Greatest Is Not a Handicap to Nicklaus

Jack Nicklaus is unusual off the golf course, too. This look at the private Nicklaus is excerpted from "The Missing Links: Golf and the Mind" (Atheneum, $8.95), a new book by Dr. David C. Morley, a psychiatrist in Greenwich, Conn. ©1967 by David C. Morley. It is printed here with permission of the publisher.

BY DAVID C. MORLEY

Randy Enos

There can be little doubt that Jack Nicklaus is the greatest golfer there has ever been. I don't think I could say that about any other athlete in any other sport. You could never, for example, convince me that Joe Namath was a better quarterback than Dutch Clark, or that Johnny Bench was a better catcher than Mickey Cochrane. But I really believe that Jack Nicklaus could have consistently defeated any golfer in the history of the sport.

Now, I don't claim to be an expert on the inner functioning of the Nicklaus mind, but, in my brief encounters with him, several things have emerged that, if they are not the basis of his genius, must at least reinforce it in a special way.

Of all the golf superstars I have met, Nicklaus seems the least affected by his greatness. Many great achievers have an unusual kind of self-consciousness that makes them appear almost aloof, which is understandable when you consider the amount of fuss that people make over them. It must become boring for celebrities to meet so many people who just want to be able to tell others that they shook hands, etc.

And there are a lot of people like this, because it's impressive when you can tell the boys at the club that, for example, you played golf with Arnold Palmer last week. (Maybe you should also mention that you played only one hole with Arnie at a convention where he was paid a handsome price to go one round with some of the clients. But why louse up a good story?)

the most impressive thing about him is his ability to remember everyone's name. What that indicates is that, whenever he meets a person, he is able to concentrate on that person and his name with the same kind of intensity as when he zeroes in on a putt. It also indicates that, at the moment, Nicklaus is more conscious of the other person than of what that person is thinking of him.

Somehow, one always associates the genius and celebrity with social alienation: "I want to be alone," as Greta Garbo used to put it. There is a trace of shyness in Nicklaus, but no sense at all of remoteness or aloofness.

His obvious consciousness of the people he meets creates a feeling of warmth and normality—the feeling that you could entertain him as easily in your kitchen as your living room. Stardom has not gone to Nicklaus's head, which takes a special kind of human quality that defies description, but is a big factor in his continuing success.

His resistance to the temptation of becoming a god is the chief reason why Nicklaus is less vulnerable than most superstars to being affected by the deflated—and phony—stratum in which many celebrities exist. So far, his extraordinary self-honesty has allowed him to live at the same level, in terms of self-esteem, as that at which most people live.

All of this leads us to what I think is maybe the true key to Nicklaus's genius, not mean the kind of attitude that causes some people to go around with long faces and bowed heads inviting the world to heap humiliation upon them. Nicklaus's humility is a humility of respect—for opponents, for golf courses, for the traditions and history of the game, and for people and things in general—and its greatest benefit is that it prevents him from getting carried away by his invincibility.

The thought of invincibility is one of the biggest problems all successful people have to face. It removes the wind from the perspective of the person's human nature, thereby opening it to all kinds of delusions.

The perspective of his humanity is something that Nicklaus has been able to hang on to throughout his years of celebrity. And as long as he continues to do so, he's going to be a very, very tough man to beat in golf.

Games For an Urbanite

By MARILYN SERMUL LA

Watching the skills, strenuous endurance of the participant Olympic Games, it seems that men and women are from a world—the one to which I am accustomed—born, raised and have all in New York City. Even the athletes in these competitive foreign to an apartment dweller.

But city dwellers have their contests of stamina, endurance and which never make headlines on sports page. We have developed physical skills, which present trophies.

Following are suggestions for the Inner City Cliff Dwellers, to be held every year in cities of the world—the first in New York City—the most demanding training grounds. Men and women are equal in the same event; winner of each event is who pleases it in the shortest time and format not important, are as follows:

THE MORNING SPRINT

Contestants leave their on the sixth floor of a building for the elevator (which is on floor). They must lock the apartment door and large bags of garbage down door generator before the elevator. (Contestants automatically if their keys fall down the with the garbage.) If they elevator, they can still win down the stairs and beating to the first floor.

THE MILK-MACHINE I

A contestant must take to the basement, get a coin from the coin machine and get the elevator before the door.

THE "HOME FREE" R

[A Night Event]

Contestants must get from stop to their apartment-how distance of five blocks) without book, wallet and themselves. Several obstacles are encountered the way: (1) a messenger; (2) riders who try to run the down; (3) a pickpocket; (4) tries to run into the lobby without; (5) a lobby door.

Mailbox: The American Way Receives an Olympic-Size Challenge

To the Editor:

Some of the underdeveloped countries are nearing sports equality with the United States, while the Socialist countries have overtaken the United States in many Olympic sports. Americans deserve a better answer as to why this is true rather than the long, self-serving alibi and sour-grape description of Soviet sports in your July 11 issue. Almost as important as winning is knowing how to behave after losing.

Robin Herman examines the Soviet way of sport without describing the main focus of sport in the Socialist countries, which is to engage everyone in sport. Thus the right to sport is law in the Soviet Union, Cuba and the other Socialist countries. In the German Democratic Republic, in Article 18 of the constitution, it is stated, "Physical culture, sport and tourism as elements of Socialist culture shall serve the universal, physical and mental development of citizens."

For Robin Herman to state "the Soviet Union withdrew into sports hibernation until it was able to form a strong centrally organized Olympic development program" is absurd. Facts show that Russian athletes took part in the 1908 and 1912 Games and that the Soviet Union was barred from the Olympics from 1920 to 1952. In 1950, the Soviet Union was invited into the Games and in 1951 an Olympic committee was set up. In 1952 at Helsinki, the Soviet Union stunned the world by tying the United States with 71 medals. How could the Russians accomplish all this in one year of Olympic preparation? It seems that from the late 1920's to 1952, beginning with the first Spartakiad Games in 1928, a tremendous mass sport movement was growing. So today in the Soviet Union over 50,000,000 men, women and children practice sport regularly and have won some level of sport merit badge. The last Spartakiad in the German Democratic Republic saw more than 5 million children and youth participate. The same type of effort occurs in Cuba and the other Socialist countries.

Today in the United States we see a similar type of mass participation in basketball, long-distance running, track and, to a lesser degree, swimming. These are events the United States is very strong in.

For the United States to compete with the Socialist countries, our Government must spend money on mass sport programs, both in the 23 Olympic sports, and the other sports. The President's Committee on Olympic Sports is gathering information to revitalize the United States Olympic movement. It is obvious that this means money for parks, playgrounds, public gyms, coaches, facilities for women and health care. Then we will see not only more Olympic medals but also tens of millions of healthier and happier people.

Youth Is Getting Even Younger

To the Editor:

If the current Olympiad demonstrates nothing else, it indicates how quickly a contestant's peak performance tends to erode. The crowds that not long ago idolized the abilities and attractive personality of Olga Korbut clearly have found a new and even more youthful individual to cheer at Montreal.

Although the Russian team finished first in women's gymnastics, it was hardly the prime focus of popular interest. With so vivid a performer as Nadia Comaneci, the Rumanians captured the audience and the spotlight.

Fame in the arts may be fleeting, but it is by no means so effervescent as renown in sports. Yesterday's winner becomes a mere statistic unless he or she can continue to meet and overcome ever-younger competitors. How does one compete with the suppleness of a Comaneci not yet 15?

Teaming Up to Pitch For the 'Big Apple'

To the Editor:

I would like to offer a suggestion that I feel would be beneficial to New York City—that the professional sports teams that represent New York (Yankees, Mets, Jets et al) provide their players or representatives with a uniform shoulder patch. This patch would depict the "Big Apple," which is rapidly becoming a New York City goodwill trademark. The patch would be worn by the players during their games and would carry the "Big Apple" message to every city in which they perform or compete.

I ask the management of the various sports organizations to consider this proposal as a positive way of saying thanks to the good city of ours. This contribution by the owners would be interpreted by the people as an act of faith in the city and its future.

What's So Patriotic About Sports Event?

To the Sports Editor:

To the gung-ho, John Wayne-Kate Smith-type patriot, anyone who questions the sacrosanct character of our national anthem merits a C.I.A. dossier plus, of course, round-the-clock surveillance.

Given this risk, I still question the relevance of the anthem as a prelude to every routine sports event. There is a time and place for it, for example, July 4, the Olympics, a Bicentennial celebration, any occasion of historic significance and the like. But by no intelligent standard can the anthem be deemed appropriate to an everyday, commercial sport event. If anything, the dignity and solemnity of the anthem are diluted and corrupted by its stereotyped use for any run-of-the-mill, commercial enterprise.

Let us by all means play and sing the national anthem, however unmelodic and musically challenging, but only where it has sincere point, purpose and respect.

Smalltime Spending By Mets Is Decried

To the Sports Editor:

Despite the controversy surrounding the advisability of Charlie Finley's recent "rummage sale" of some of the game's top ballplayers, a much more relevant question is achingly being asked by some New Yorkers: Where are the Mets? As one of the league's wealthiest teams, with attendance hovering near 2 million yearly despite a mediocre team, Met management has shown an abysmal lack of concern for either their fans or players.

While George Steinbrenner, despite his legal hassles, continues to gainfully spend needed money for available talent to "bring a winner to New York," the catatonic Mets offer a token bid at best on the likes of Catfish Hunter, Andy Messersmith, Dick Allen, Rollie Fingers, Joe Rudi and Vida Blue. This type of quality ballplayer just doesn't seem to appeal to Joe MacDonald and M. Donald Grant, who prefer to make three-time Cy Young winner, Tom Seaver, grovel for the $200,000 he well deserves, a yearly sum the Texas Rangers were glad to pay an inferior Bert Blyleven.

Yet the Mets are in desperate need of players of the caliber mentioned above. In need of a top flight pitcher, do they make a realistic monetary offer for an available quality player with money they have readily available? No. Instead they unloaded much of what little hitting punch they possessed in the form of Rusty Staub in exchange for an aged and questionable Mickey Lolich. When will the Met management stop ignoring the obvious needs of the team and their fans?

Measure of Greatness Nadia Comaneci: Fearless and Tireless

of The New York Times
MONTREAL, July 24—It is a piece of wood, only 16 feet wide and 16 feet high. It is hardly the object of a 14-year-old girl to fool around with moves such as front somersaults, double backflips and consecutive backflips.

Multiple-exposure photo shows winning style of Nadia Comaneci of Rumania as she won gold medal on balance beam Nadia Comaneci treats the beam as if it were a stage, defying the laws of logic and fear as she out her routines seemingly effortlessly.

"There is no fear," "Bela" Miss Comaneci's coach, said on occasions, citing the first factor to a gymnast's greatness.

Yet many persons who have come in contact with Miss Comaneci, away from the arena, contend that under the intense, aloof exterior, she is basically "a little girl."

coach of the American Women's team. "And she has the ability to handle the load."

Part of Miss Comaneci's strength is that she loves to compete, that she would do with no one in the stands as she does in front of 18,000 cheering spectators.

like chalking the bar—almost anything to keep her mind active. Although a rule was drawn up to prohibit gymnasts from leaving their seats, it was never enforced, primarily because the star never sat down.

Even the dolls from over 60 countries that she collects at home are lined up neatly on a shelf in her room. When she is old enough to take cosmetics seriously, you can bet they will be applied with care.

Miss Comaneci already has perfected during back aerial somersaults on the balance beam, considered the most difficult apparatus in the sport. Her routine in the floor exercise included a double back flip, although she did not use it here.

"She is capable of doing whatever she sets her mind on doing," said Frank Bare, the executive director of the United States Gymnastics Federation. "Telling her it can't be done is like telling a baseball player he's too small to be a home run hitter."

"Athletes from Eastern European countries are conditioned to this type of routine," says Cathy Rigby Mason, the first prominent American gymnast. "They'll pay that price for success. There are a lot of other distractions for a young girl growing up in the United States."

Good Wind, Good Will Mark Olympic Yachting

In the area of the boat basin reserved for Tempests, Conner's unnamed sloop shares a two-boat dock with Eskimo, the Tempest sailed by Mankin. The American and Soviet yachtsmen are also side-by-side in the Soling Class also share one of the floating docks that jut out at right angles from the main pier.

but Soviet skippers are ahead of the Americans in three of the other five classes. Only in the Tornado Class, the 30-mile-an-hour catamaran, and the Soling Class, does the United States have a better position. John Kolius is fourth in the Soling and David McFaul of Honolulu, with a first and a fourth in the most recent races, ranks fourth among the Tornado skippers. His Soviet counterpart is 13th.

"The first two races," said McFaul, a 27-year-old skipper, "we weren't sailing with a full-court press. We got to the first mark 10th or 11th, and that's no way to win a race."

Where'd you find all that breeze?"

McFaul's explanation, after the Aussie had left: "The closer we went to land, the more wind we got."

Lake Ontario usually provides the kind of steady wind sailors relish. But it can be unpredictable, and the fourth race for the 470's, Tornados and Finns was one of those days. The breeze rarely got above 6 knots, and the Tempests, Flying Dutchmen and Sonings had to wait until yesterday to sail their fourth race.

Not far away, on the gray stone walls of a federal penitentiary, guards look toward distant sails on Lake Ontario in the kind of view people pay big money to get at most resorts. The girls in bikinis walk past, making sure their security I.D. cards don't hide anything.

computer will give him a perfect mark of zero going into the sixth race.

But the point battle doesn't seem to detract from yachting's traditional mood of leisure here, where a visit the other day by Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip produced a banner front-page Whig-Standard headline that read: "Thousands Came To Greet Them!"

On the sundeck of the Olympic Yachting Center, men in blazers and women in summery dresses sit at tables sipping gin-and-tonics, just as they do in Larchmont, N.Y., and Newport, R.I., and everywhere else where sailors battle wind and tide. In the yacht-center restaurant, diners are more interested in the bouillabaisse than in the 70-ounce roast beef.

And down on the dock before they head for the course, Conner holds the palms of his hands parallel, like a fighter pilot describing a dogfight, and says to Mankin, "You were here, he was there. Was he faster?"

Red Smith Greeks Had Words for It

MONTREAL, July 24—A guy from Germany said he was taking a poll and needed an American opinion: would the Olympic Games survive or collapse? Would there be another carnival four years hence in Moscow and if so, what about 1984? If the American had to bet, would he bet that Olympics would take place in 1984? The American said he sometimes bet on horses and even guessed right on rare occasions, but that was the limit of his imbecility. To bet on people would be stupid; trying to predict how politicians and playground directors would behave four or eight years hence would be sheer madness.

Soviet emblem for 1980 Olympics After Moscow, what?

"We had the first of the daily elevator breakdowns about 10 minutes ago," said Tim Horgan of Boston this morning. "If you thought you were in Hook and Ladder Co. No. 2, that was the emergency call bell."

Excitable is the word for the Hotel Meridien's self-service elevators. But Montreal's newest hotel provides creature comforts, courteous service and excellent food. Partly because the accredited press outnumbers competitors by a thousand or so and partly because of security measures made indispensable by the massacre of Israelis in Munich four years ago, interviewing athletes can be difficult, but the Olympics in ancient Greece had an official corps of whip-bearers to keep order, and it is said a master threatened a slave with a trip to Olympia as punishment for disobedience.

"But some unpleasant and hard things happen in life," wrote the First Century Stoic, Epictetus. "Do you not sweeter? Are you not cramped and crowded? Do you not bathe badly? Are you not drenched whenever it rains? Do you not have your fill of tumult and shouting and other annoyances? But I fancy that you bear and endure it all by balancing it off against the memorable character of the spectacle."

Zeus Could Get Sore
Epictetus is quoted by M. I. Finley and H. W. Pleket in their new book, "The Olympic Games: The First Thousand Years," and if anybody thinks the troubles besetting Montreal's big show are a modern development, he ought to check with these scholars.

was supposed to play Cuba. Well, in A.D. 93, Apollonius, a boxer from Alexandria, was late for the 218th Olympics and said he had been delayed by headwinds in the Aegean. Heracles, a teammate from Alexandria, said nuts, the breeze had been favorable but Apollonius had used up his travel time fighting for money in Asia Minor. When they gave the wreath to Heracles, Apollonius slugged him and got fined.

Then there was the case of Lichas, the ringer. He was a Spartan diplomat, and when Sparta was barred from the games in 420 B.C. because she was at war with Elis, Lichas entered the chariot race posing as a Boeotian. He was caught and flogged.

Hopes for Tomorrow
Cheating, faking, using the Olympics for political gain, cashing in on athletic renown—the Greeks had words for it all. Even the ancient judges caught hell. In 396 B.C. they gave a sprinter from Elis a 2-1 decision over a runner from Ambracia. The Olympic Council reversed the decision and fined the two chauvinists.

It's a Women's Olympics, Despite the Politics and U.S. Men Swimmer

BY JOSEPH DURSO
Special to The New York Times
MONTREAL, July 24—From Queen Elizabeth to little Nadia Comaneci, the dramatic development of the XXI Olympiad so far has been that it's a women's Olympics, despite the politics, protests, security and American men's swimming team.

The Talk of the Olympics turned into the second week of performance today, and the stage was being cleared for the "big boys" in basketball, boxing and track. But in the streets of Montreal and the corridors of the $685 million Olympic Stadium, most of the talk and emotional response were lavished on the women—Kornelia Ender's winning, Shirley Babashoff's losing,

Princess Anne's falling from her horse, Nadia in triumph and Olga Korbut in tragedy, and the 7-foot lullyaka Semanova, the gentle Amazon of the basketball court.

"Esthetically," reflected Samuel Lalkis, chief of the Israeli delegation, "there's nothing like the world to compare with it."

"How would I relate to Olga losing her starring role to Nadia?" asked O. J. Simpson, who sprinted for Southern California before he started sprinting for the National Football League.

"It's so humiliating, I really have difficulty in even thinking about it. Maybe it would be like this: After I gained 2,000 yards rushing in 1973, if I came back to camp in '74 and got beat out of my job by a rookie."

For some people, the 2,000 women athletes here have been prospering among the 5,000 men because television was dramatizing them before a worldwide audience. For others, the reason was that people grew weary of the international politics, nationalism and commercialism, and hungered for some on-stage action. For others, it was that the Olympics were growing so colossal in size that the audience was searching for the "individual" among the masses.

Whatever the reason, more women athletes were supplying more theatrics in a show marked by raging extremes: 186 events in 21 sports 27 centuries after the ancient Greeks started it all with a 200-yard race during a religious festival from which women were barred even as spectators.

The extremes are more pronounced than ever now, even in downtown Montreal. In the great Basica opposite Dominion Square, red Olympic banners with the five intertwined circles flank the main altar from ceiling to floor. But in the Queen Elizabeth Hotel across the street, every entrance is blocked by soldiers who require all visitors to pass through metal-detecting devices.

That is, the Canadians are afraid of terrorism, from abroad and have spent $140 million to prevent the kind of violence that cost the lives of 11 Israeli athletes at the last Olympics in Munich in 1972. And yet the most ironic threat of disruption this weekend came from local taxi drivers, who were angry because their business was ruined by fleets of "official" cars and the free-shuttle service provided for so many persons working at the games.

In the midst of the extremes and disputes, the women then stepped into the spotlight. Nadia knocked off perfect scores in gymnastics while Olga wept in the wings. Shirley observed that "Ender works very hard at the beginning of a race, then dies at the end" and then Ender beat her at the end. The Queen and her family charmed the multitudes by dropping in unannounced to see the swimming, then later settled back for the equestrian events and watched the Princess on her horse. Margaret Murdock won the shooting match against men, then lost it after an error had been discovered in the scoring.

Even the Olympic torch was run into the stadium one week ago by a 15-year-old Canadian girl jogging alongside a 15-year-old Canadian boy. And on the basketball court, everyone gasped at the Soviet center who towered over the other players. But even her size-14 shoes did not diminish the romance injected into the Games by the women. They called her Laris, a term of endearment, and described her as "sweet and gentle."

"There's no way anyone has a chance against her, she's just so big," reported Sheila Strike, the Canadian center. "I wanted my picture taken with her and she playfully put her arm around the best athletes world."

arm around her, it's her waist.

"I see her at the Village with her hair the time and her gathered around seems strange to say a 7-foot woman, but way it's as though I protecting her."

And it may seem to say about the O the two-week test of and stamina, but in they are being prob the growing role of "I was a skinny when I ran in the Games," said Wil doph, the one-time from Tennessee. "The girls are great ers. They are well and they are show they're able to com the best athletes world."

Mohawk 'Games' Olympic Sideshow

Special to The New York Times
CAUGHNAWAGA INDIAN RESERVE, Quebec, July 24—Rejecting the white man's presentation of native culture as depicted in the official cultural program for the Olympic Games, the energetic Mohawks of this prosperous reserve just outside Montreal are staging their own daily portrayal of Indian life, present and past, for Olympic visitors.

"We want the people from all countries to see the Indians as they really are," George Hill, organizer of the two-week event, told a visitor from the United States yesterday.

Thousands of visitors to the Games have made the short trip from Montreal—20 minutes by taxi—to watch the Indian dance rituals, to the beat of drums and gourd rattles, with ceremonial chants and the reenactment of a powwow, or tribal gathering, in the setting of a recreated Mohawk village from earlier times.

The proceeds from the admission charges and sales of handicrafts will go toward meeting the cost of a projected $250,000 hospital for the reserve. It would replace the present clinic staffed by two young Indian nurses.

Chiefs from major tribes across Canada are assisting the Mohawks in demonstrating Indian arts, crafts and lifestyles, as practiced in real life, in contrast to what Hill called the "phony" version seen elsewhere.

Of 500 participants in an Indian dance included in the closing ceremonies for the Games, according to Hill, 200 are "whites in Indian costume." And the Indian presentations in the public performances sponsored by the Montreal Olympic Committee leave a misleading impression that the first Canadians were "a bunch of spear-waving savages," he said.

Much that a visitor sees at Caughnawaga, the home of the Mohawk workers on "high steel" who helped erect New York's most famous skyscrapers, is as modern as any small town in a prosperous area of the American farm belt. Neat clapboard houses are surrounded by closely clipped lawns and well-painted picket fences.

The sporting aspects of the Caughnawaga scene are partly Indian, if the canoes and kayaks in use at the padding club, a center of leisure activity on the reserve, are included. The reserve also has a golf course, and the Indians play baseball, hockey and lacrosse.

"Lacrosse, an Indian game now played in the United States and many European countries, should have been included in the Olympics staged in Canada," said Chief Andrew Delisle head of the Caughnawaga band council.

Caughnawaga, a 300-year-old settlement on the St. Lawrence River 15 miles south of downtown Montreal, is a showplace among Canadian Indian reserves because of its prosperity. The name means "above the rapids."

A plaque on the stone wall around the 17th-century Roman Catholic Church beside the deep green river, part of the St. Lawrence International Seaway, says that the fortified enclosure, called Fort St. Louis, was "erected in 1725 by France for the protection of the Christian Iroquois."

"At one time everybody in Caughnawaga spoke French," said Delisle. "Now we all speak English, with accents of Brooklyn, Cleveland or Chicago, where Caughnawaga men have worked in high steel."

At one time, the chief said, up to 300 families from Caughnawaga migrated to Brooklyn every fall, mostly concentrating in two blocks along State Street. In summer, wives and children returned to the reserve, with the men driving home for weekends.

Delisle, an articulate man who looks prematurely white-haired, credited the import of "American know how" by the steel workers for Caughnawaga's affluent appearance, compared with most other Indian reserves in Canada.

A decline in building activity in the United States finds many Caughnawaga men looking for other work, said Delisle, who is also president of the Indian Association of Quebec. The reserve has a population of about 5,000, the second largest single concentration of Indians in the country next to the 8,000 on a reserve near Brantford, Ontario, he said.

"We'll find something, for Mohawks are famous for adapting to situations," the chief declared. "We were hunters, then fishermen, then farmers, and when we were driven from the land, we went up in the air on steel."

Allison Delormier gives instructions to competitors in a kayak race at the Caughnawaga Indian Reserve in Quebec. The tribe is staging a show of Indian life.

of Cleveland, the 1968 Olympic champion, and Wendy Koenig Knudson of Loveland, Colo., were eliminated in the women's 800-meter semifinals. Mrs. Knudson ran seventh in the first heat in 2:02.31 and Mrs. Jackson ran eighth and last in the second heat, trotting home in 2:07.25. Anita Weiss of East Germany won the first heat in 1:56.53 and Svetlana Strykina of the Soviet Union was second in 1:57.28.

"I couldn't relax," said Mrs. Jackson. "I've been relaxed all day, but the first final got to me. I began thinking, 'I've got to run her in the final.'"

The three Americans advanced through two rounds of the women's 100-meter dash to the semifinals. They were Brenda Morehead of Toledo, Ohio; 16-year-old Chandra Chesborough of Jacksonville, Fla., and Evelyn Ashford of Roseville, Calif.

Qualifying Efforts High
The morning was typically Montreal—sunny, warm (80 degrees) and humid (71 percent). The program was thin but the quality of performers was high.

All Americans and all foreign favorites advanced in the qualifying round of the men's discus and pole vault. Mae Wilkins, John Powell and Jay Silverster moved into the discus final tomorrow and Dave Roberts, Earl Bell and Terry Porter qualified for the pole-vault final on Monday. Wilkins led the discus qualifying with a throw of 224 feet, an Olympic record. Silverster was at 203-7 and Powell 201-8.

The qualifying standard was 195-10, and a ribbon on the field marked that distance. Anyone who threw over the line made the final. Fifteen succeeded. Wilkins on his first throw.

"I just wanted to get a good throw," he said. "Guess I got one. Yesterday, I had a good workout, excellent workout. Two throws at 70 meters. Guess I'm as good as everyone expected.

Seventy meters is 229-8. Wilkins holds the world record of 70.86 meters, or 232-6. He really is as good as everyone expected.

He is a University of Oregon graduate, 25 years old, 6 feet 4 inches and 233 pounds, with a beard that makes him look like a Viking warrior. He lives in San Jose, Calif., and trains there with many other Olympic throwers, male and female.

Powell is a 29-year-old policeman in San Jose, 6-1 and 244 pounds. He and Wilkins train with many of the same people, but not together. They are not exactly friends, though each respects the other's ability.

After the qualifying, Powell said of Wilkins:

"Chance for Record"
"He's on his way to sewing it up. I don't see how he can be stopped. You've got a chance to see a world record tomorrow."

Wilkins, Powell and Wolfgang Schmidt of East Germany are the best bets for medals in the discus. The leading candidates in the pole vault are two Americans (Roberts and Bell) and three Poles (Wladyslaw Kozalski-wicz, Wojciech Buciariski and Tadeusz Susarski).

Qualifying was simple in the pole vault, too. Anyone who cleared 16-8 1/2 made the final, and 20 men did. Among them were Roberts, a 25-year-old student at the University of Florida's medical school; Bell, a 20-year-old senior at Arkansas State, and 24-year-old Terry Porter of Fort Worth.

Porter wore a tape around the left thigh. He hurt the hamstring, the long muscle behind the thigh, in a workout here.

Roberts, who vaults left-handed, set the world record of 18-8 1/2 at the United States Olympic trials in Eugene, Ore., a month ago. Bell held the record of 18-7 1/2 before that.

Such athletes as Roberts and Bell gave the American men realistic chances for medals in 16 of the 23 Olympic events and gold medals in 11. The only events in which Americans did not figure to have a chance for medals were the 1,500-meter, 3,000-meter and 10,000-meter runs; steeplechase, hammer throw and javelin throw.

Chances for the American women were not as great. They had hopes for gold medals from Kathy McMillan in the long jump (she finished second yesterday), Miss Schmidt in the javelin and Mrs. Jackson the 800, and they hoped for medays in 5 of the 11 other events. But the men's team had many more opportunities for medals of all colors.

"This is a very strong team, stronger than Munich in 1972," said Dr. Leroy Walker, head coach of the American men. "We expect to do exceptionally well."

Miss Ender Faci Dramatic Reun

Special to The New York Times
MONTREAL, July 24—Mrs. Rosalie Lehmann of Salina, Kan., has two tickets for the final night of the Olympic swimming competition tomorrow. She will be watching Kornelia Ender, the East German champion, with more than routine interest.

The 18-year-old Miss Ender, who will be bidding for a fifth Olympic gold medal, is her granddaughter. Mrs. Lehmann, 66, has not seen Kornelia since she was 5 months old.

Their dramatic reunion may become one of the most heartening stories of this Olympics, if political red tape can be overcome.

Mrs. Lehmann defected East Germany in 1959 and spent 18 months in West Germany before going to the United States. She has followed her granddaughter's illustrious career through newspapers and television, but was unable to get in touch with her or members of the family by mail or phone.

Mrs. Lehmann's son from a previous marriage, Heinz Ender, is Kornelia's father. Plans to reunite the two developed after published reports had told Mrs. Lehmann's relationship to Miss Ender. A national periodical, Midnight Magazine of Greenwich, Conn., communicated with Mrs. Lehmann and offered to pay her expenses, and those of her husband, Kurt, 70, to Montreal for the reunion.

A Tale of Two Sprinters

MONTREAL, July 24—In the house of the world's fastest human was named in the Olympic 100-meter today, James Gilkes (pronounced kes) is from Guyana in South America and attends the University of South California, but when Guyana joined the African boycott, he requested to compete under the Olympic flag. No, intoned the International Olympic Committee from on high.

Typical of its bureaucratic philosophy, the I.O.C. recognizes national Olympic committees, not athletes, so James Gilkes emerged as the sprinter without a country.

"I watch the 100," James Gilkes says now. "It's real open, very open."

"You were running," a man asked, "sprinter who has done the 100 in 10 seconds flat, 'do you think you can do it?'"

"Yeah, yeah," he answered. "I'm in your best shape ever?"

"Yeah, yeah," he said. "The best." Before the 100-meter heats yesterday, Gilkes worked out at the Olympic track in the red and white uniform of the Maccabi Union Track Club in Los Angeles.

"I was running?" asked Steve Kates, the American sprinter.

"I was running," James Gilkes said. "I'm not just working out."

"These Games Only"

James Gilkes was just hoping really, that the I.O.C. might change its mind at the last moment. But it didn't. In its statement Thursday the I.O.C. had mentioned "human, ethical and moral" reasons for not permitting Gilkes to compete. The legal reasons are understandable. If the I.O.C. accepted individual entries for the Olympics, the events would be unmanageable. That's why the I.O.C. deals with national Olympic committees which select the nation's athletes. Legally and ethically, the I.O.C. has a defense. Humanly and ethically, Gilkes belonged in the 100-meter race. He was here. He was willing to compete.

In the Taiwan dispute developed last week, the I.O.C. chose to let the two teams compete "for these Games only" under their own flag and anthem, but not the flag of the Republic of China, an offer which was rejected.

Legally and ethically, the I.O.C. has a defense. Humanly and ethically, Gilkes belonged in the 100-meter race. He was here. He was willing to compete.

boycotting nations were to join James Gilkes, all the better. They would be the purist Olympians of all here.

"I haven't talked to my family at home," James Gilkes was saying now. "They don't have a phone."

His father is dead, but his mother, grandmother, two sisters and a 3-year-old brother live in Georgetown, the capital of Guyana.

"I don't know if they even know I'm still here," he said.

He is staying in a Montreal motel with his Maccabi Union Track Club coach, Whitey Taylor of Los Angeles.

"I will stay and watch the 200-meter final Monday," he said.

James Gilkes is considered even better in the 200, where Don Quarrie of Jamaica is the favorite for the gold medal.

"The competition isn't that good in the 200," he said. "I know I would be in that final Monday with Quarrie."

Perhaps the I.O.C. will change its mind by Monday, but probably not.

"It is worse to watch," James Gilkes said. "But the 100 and the 200 are my events and I want to see them."

The Denials

Another sprinter, Bob Martin of Canada, also was watching and wondering what might have been, but he deserved to watch. Bob Martin was expelled yesterday from Canada's team for sheltering in the Olympic Village an American friend named Paul Wilkinson, a former University of Oregon teammate. Perhaps if Bob Martin had confessed immediately, he would merely have been reprimanded. But he repeatedly denied to Canadian officials that the ineligible visitor had stayed in his room for the last week. He reportedly even denied that a person named Paul Wilkinson existed.

"Because of his insistence at telling lies," Maurice Allon, the Canadian Olympic official was quoted, "his federation felt he could not remain. The lies had 90 percent of the bearing on his expulsion."

Bob Martin's explanation as that, "I wasn't trying to perpetrate a hoax, I wasn't trying to be malicious, I wasn't trying to test security, it was just a silly thing." Apparently he was just finding a place to stay for a college buddy, and that's understandable. His first mistake was denying his involvement. But his bigger mistake was mentioning that "this kind of thing was done so much in Munich" four years ago. That's where Bob Martin violated not only the rules of the Olympic Village but also violated the memory of the Munich massacre.

And so James Gilkes and Bob Martin watched today's 100-meter final. James Gilkes deserved better. Bob Martin did not.

IT TAKES MORE THAN SIZE TO PUT A CAR IN VOLVO'S CLASS.

We'll be the first to admit, there are a number of cars around that offer as much interior space as a Volvo.

Granada, Volare, Monarch, Cutlass. The principal difference, however, lies in the cars that enclose this interior space.

Despite the room inside, a Volvo's outside is from five inches to a foot and a half shorter than any of these other cars. (Which means you have from five inches to a foot and a half less to park.) And its turning circle is from seven to ten feet smaller.

But there are greater dimensions to a Volvo than its dimensions.

Consider what you sit on once you get in. Volvo's infinitely adjustable bucket seats weren't designed by decorators. They were engineered in cooperation with orthopedic specialists. Car and Driver says... "they hold you in a position that is more comfortable than you'll get in almost any other contemporary car."

Volvo's 4-wheel power disc brakes stop shorter than a Granada, Volare, Monarch or Cutlass. Its fuel-injected overhead cam engine out-accelerates them all.

And all you have to do is take these five cars around a tight curve to appreciate the handling differences Volvo's rack and pinion steering and spring-strut suspension make.

With a Volvo, you also get a car that lasts an average of 16.6 years in Sweden. (According to the latest figures from The Swedish Motor Vehicle Inspection Company.)

A car whose safety characteristics impress even the U.S. government. In fact, they're buying 24 Volvos for a crash-testing program that will help establish safety standards for cars of the future.

You can pay a lot of money for cars like Granada, Volare, Monarch and Cutlass. But before you do, pay us a visit.

We think you'll find these other cars don't size up to Volvo at all.

THERE ARE A LOT OF CARS IN VOLVO'S PRICE CLASS. BUT NOT IN VOLVO'S CLASS.

dash for Track Tickets jets Spectators Into Finals

The New York Times
SAL, July 24 — of surprised trouble to buy tickets for the Olympic track and field competition in all five categories on sale at 1 P.M. completion of the event.

"I was surprised to see how many people were buying tickets," said Arnie Teasdale, a house-builder in Yonkers, N.Y. "I've got the men's 100-meter final and a few other finals. I figured everything was sold out."

Teasdale came to Montreal to see his niece, Tammy McLeod, compete for Canada in the women's platform diving. He had a ticket for tonight's program in that event, but decided to check with the main information center to see if anything was left for track and field. He was told this morning that tickets were available at $4, $9, $13, $21, and $24.

By noon, an hour before the windows opened, lines at some of the ticket booths were more than 100 yards long. Teasdale was No. 10 in a much shorter line in front of the $24 window.

Two other Americans in line, Mr. and Mrs. Steve Snow of Boston, also were grateful for the sudden opportunity to see some track and field finals. "We flew here last night for the weekend," said Snow. "It took us until midnight to get the computer to put us in the hotel we wanted, but we're glad to see this program today. So many things seem to be sold out."

Two teen-agers from Dix Hills, N.Y., also were in line. "I bought a ticket for tonight's swimming and diving action," said Boyer, age 16, who held a previously purchased $4 standing-room ticket for tonight's swimming and diving action. "They don't have enough seats there."

But at Olympic Stadium, with its capacity of 70,000, the situation appears bright at the moment. As the latecomers waited to buy their tickets for today's 3 P.M. program, an Olympic aide with a bullhorn in his hand assured them: "There are plenty of seats. Please don't worry. It's all under control."

This morning's program consisted of qualifying for the men's discus and pole vault, plus six heats of the women's 100-meter dash—nothing more. Yet there were perhaps 30,000 spectators in the stands, paying from $8 for the best seats to $3 for standing room. The official count of tickets sold for the morning competition was 43,633.

A new ticket was needed for the afternoon program, where the top of $24 bought seats along the final stretch. On the final day of track, a week from today, the good seats will cost $40.

The afternoon finals supposedly were sold out for every day, but such is obviously not the case. There are even more tickets available for the morning action, and some of these sessions are attractive. On Monday, for example, the morning program includes heats of the men's 110-meter high hurdles, men's 400-meter dash, women's 200-meter dash and qualifying for the men's hammer throw and women's high jump.

Naber Sets Mark In Swim Qualifier

individual gold medal," Nelson said, "and this is her best opportunity to do it."

The decision to scratch Miss Babashoff, although she has no medical problems, may be without precedent for an American swimmer in an Olympics. It also is certain to produce some protest from friends of Bonn Glasgoff of Baltimore, the fourth-place finisher in the 400-individual medley at the United States trials.

If Miss Babashoff had decided not to enter the 400-individual medley here, Miss Glasgoff might have received the third spot on the United States team.

"It never occurred to Shirley not to swim it here," Nelson said. "It's a decision that could not have been made until now."

There is little doubt that American officials are uneasy over the East German medal haul in the women's events, just as the East Germans have been jealous of the string of world record performances by United States men.

The decision by Roland Matthes, the former Olympic backstroke king from East Germany, to scratch from trials of the 200-backstroke today was a concession to Naber's overwhelming superiority.

Roger Pyttel's failure to survive opening heats of the 100-freestyle today, although he had one of the world's faster times this year, also may have mystified East German coaches. Pyttel's time today, 53.93, was almost two seconds slower than his best performance this year and well under the 51.47 of Joe Bottom of Santa Clara, the leader in the trials.

Naber has been the big man for the United States in more ways than his rangy frame. A gold medal tonight would put the Menlo Park, Calif., resident in such select company as Don Schollander, who won four gold medals in swimming at the 1964 Tokyo Games.

Mark Spitz, who collected seven gold medals in Munich, is the only other swimmer to surpass this feat.

John Naber of U.S. in action in 200-meter backstroke in Montreal. He won heat in an Olympic record time.

Olympic Sidelights Security Breakdown Is Rare at Olympics

MONTREAL, July 24—Canada has spent $100 million in assembling a 16,000-man security force for the Olympics. And there are even jet fighter planes on standby in case of violation of air space over the Games sites such as Montreal and Bromont, Quebec, and Kingston, Ontario, where the equestrian events are being held. Still there are some breakdowns and some seemingly unnecessary precautions.

Because of one breakdown, Canada's Olympic Association expelled Bob Martin, a top sprinter, hours before he was to compete in the 100 meters yesterday for smuggling a friend into the Olympic Village. The impostor was Paul Wilkinson, a physical education teacher from Eugene, Ore., who had been staying with the team—undetected by the security officers—since July 14.

There is also the case of Pat Neesham, an Australian who came here to be near his husband, David, the captain of the water polo team. She says Olympic Security officers keep shooing her away from her husband. She says there should be special accreditation tags for relatives and offered the proposal that hers might read, "Merely A Loving Wife."

"We didn't get a medal but I'm proud of what we did," said 343-pound Pete Lee, United States heavyweight wrestler, after he and Brad Rheingans, last hopes for the first United States medal ever in Olympic Greco-Roman, were both eliminated last night. In the 1972 Olympics the United States team won a total of two matches. This year's team finished 12-19.

After last night, the Soviet team with wrestlers among the three finalists in each of the five weight classes, were shoo-ins for medals. The only questions being which medals, and Jim Peckman, the United States manager, made this observation on their readiness: "The Russians came here with 10 wrestlers and 11 coaches. That should tell you something about their program."

Now that he has fulfilled two of his life's ambitions (1) reaching the age of 100 and (2) seeing his great-granddaughter run as co-bearing of the Olympic flame at the opening ceremonies on July 17, Albert Henderson has another goal. To watch the Montreal Expos in a World Series Can he wait until next year?

Peter Kormann, the winner of the first United States medal in men's gymnastics since 1932, realized he had to do something spectacular to get the attention of the judges, even if he came up with egg on his face.

That's why the 21-year-old from Braintree, Mass., picked his most spectacular move, a full twisting, double back on the mount for his opening gambit. Then after he'd done it perfectly, he did it again to wrap up a 9.8 score from the judges, and ultimately third-place bronze medal.

"But it was taking a risk because I hadn't done one since I hurt my ankle a couple of months ago," said Kormann, a student at Southern Connecticut State. "I tried it twice in practice and crashed landed flat on my face. Maybe this will open the eyes among the judges. Maybe some people will say now: 'Hey the U.S.A. is pretty good.'"

Game Halted by a Rainstorm the First in N.F.L. History

BY N. WALLACE
The New York Times
July 24—For the first time in the history of the National Football League, a game was halted in the middle of the first quarter because of rain.

The game between the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Philadelphia Eagles was suspended at 10:15 a.m. after the first quarter. The rain was so heavy that the field was completely unplayable. The game was rescheduled for Sunday, July 25, at 1:00 p.m.

The suspension of the game was a first in the history of the N.F.L. The game was the first of the All-Star game in the history of the league.

quarterbacks, Mike Kurczek of Boston College, Craig Penrose of San Diego State and Jeb Blount of Tulsa. Blount played the most and near the end he was running for his life to get away from Steve Furness, L.C. Greenwood, Dwight White and Ernie Holmes. These defensive linemen were shedding the blocks of the All-Stars' second-string offensive line as though flicking away flies.

Coach Ara Parseghian had built his offense around Joe Washington, the elusive little running back from Oklahoma with the shifty moves. He was the best of the former Notre Dame coach had. But Washington could do little, his longest gain being 18 yards on a pass from Blount.

The future San Diego Chargers runner could not turn upfield against the Steeler line-backers, Jack Lambert, Jack Ham and Andy Russell, who played superbly as usual.

A near capacity crowd of 52,895 turned out for the 43d game of this series, which has been so lopsided the last recorded All-Star victory came 13 years ago.

Stars, with only 16 days to fit together as a team could give the pro champions a contest. They did not and there were few who regretted the merciful decision to stop the game because of the elements.

There was nothing more to see except thousands of youths skidding over the rubbery turf on their bellies, yanking at a steel goalpost or waving like leaping idiots at a television camera sending a picture no farther than its monitor truck out in the flooded parking lot.

Jim Taylor, the fullback for the Green Bay Packers when they had the great teams coached by Vince Lombardi in the 1950's; the late Len Ford, a defensive end for the Cleveland Browns (1951-1955), who made the pass rush a formidable tactic, and Ray Flaherty, who coached the Redskins to the only two championships they have ever won (1937, 1943), were inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame today at Canton, Ohio.

The Denver Broncos and the Detroit Lions later played in the annual Hall of Fame exhibition game.

Todd, Top Jets' Pick, Signs; Turk, Mulligan Injure Knees

By AL HARVIN
The New York Jets won a couple and lost a couple yesterday. First they won over and signed their last holdout, Richard Todd, the quarterback and No. 1 selection. Then they won their controlled scrimmage against the Philadelphia Eagles. However, the Jets also lost their best linebacker and their starting center with injuries.

Richard Todd, right, observing as Joe Namath, left, called play during scrimmage yesterday at Hofstra against the Philadelphia Eagles. Todd signed a contract with the Jets yesterday.

product of the University of Alabama, has been cited as the heir apparent to Namath at quarterback. He signed a series of one-year pacts totaling five years for an estimated $500,000.

Phillips's Oiler Camp Is the Envy of N.F.L.

HUNTSVILLE, Tex., July 21 (UPI)— Sometimes, at the Houston Oilers' training camp in this quiet rural college town, a player gets off to holding five doubles in a game of Forty-Two.

But even then, says the fullback, Don Hardeman, "it's hard to beat the man, because he'll figure out what your off-rocks are and he'll set you."

The "man" is Bum Phillips, 52 years old, who is beginning his second season as head coach and general manager of the Oilers.

Phillips is respected by the Oilers' players for more than his wins. "Their honest respect for Bum borders on love," said a camp follower.

he left the running to the individuals. "When we're on the field, we don't goof around," said Mauck, the starting center. "When we are off the field, we are on our own. If you don't take care of yourself, it will show."

Before the first workout, Bubba Smith threatened to stay off the practice field until he signed a contract. But when the other players headed to practice on opening day, the veteran defensive end sought out Tom Williams, the assistant general manager. Both men joined the first practice minutes later.

"I tried to hold out for more than one practice," said Bubba. "I would have, too, any place but here. I couldn't do it to Bum. I couldn't let him down."

Phillips has established rapport with players who have had problems elsewhere. At one outside linebacker position he has Steve Kiner, a former drug user, committing against a former Philadelphia Eagle, Tim Rossovich.

LARCHMONT, N. Y., July 24—The midsummer sailing jamboree which is Larchmont Race Week, being held for the 78th time on Long Island Sound, drew toward its conclusion after one of its more successful runs yesterday.

There were 163 starters, making a total of 1,504 for six of the scheduled first seven days. A lack of wind prevented any of an estimated 325 yachts from starting Wednesday, the final of three junior days. Race Week ended today with racing in all divisions.

Colleges as Farms Bearing Little Fruit

By ALEX YANNIS
While professional basketball and football rely on the colleges as a farm system, the same is not true for soccer, which starves for native talent in the United States.

One general manager in the North American Soccer League feels the league should drop the college draft and search for another way to develop American soccer players.

Terms of Baseball's New Four-Year Accord Explained

By MURRAY CHASS

Sometime in the first half of next November, a player draft that could be the most intriguing in sports history will be held to determine which clubs will compete for which free-agent baseball players.

Drafts of college players and drafts to stock expansion teams have their own particular significance and interest, but the players available in those selection systems are players who are untried on the professional level or who are well on their way out of the professional level.

Baseball's negotiation-rights draft, on the other hand, could feature a significant number of the game's stars—Fred Lynn, Reggie Gich, Dick Allen, Joe Rudi, Bobby Grich, Carlton Fisk, Dave Cash, Ken Holtzman and Rollie Fingers, for example.

The mechanics of the negotiation-rights draft were outlined in copies of the new four-year agreement that were mailed to the 600 major league players late last week. Marvin Miller and John Gaherin, chief negotiators for the players and the owners, respectively, have steadfastly refused to disclose the terms until the players add their ratification to the owners, but a copy of the agreement was obtained by The New York Times.

Second Trading Period

Virtually all the key terms of the revolutionary agreement have been previously disclosed. These include the right of an unsigned player to become a free agent at the end of this season, a signed player to become a free agent after playing out the renewal year in his current contract and, under future contracts, a player with six years' major league service to become a free agent by notifying his club in writing after the season that he wants to be a free agent. No option year or advance notice is necessary under the future system.

A player with five years' major league service has the right to demand a trade at the end of a season, and he may list a maximum of six clubs to which he doesn't want to be traded. If he isn't traded by the following March 15, he becomes a free agent.

To facilitate trades of any kind, a second interleague trading period, from Feb. 15 through March 15, was adopted. The first runs from the end of the World Series to the end of baseball's winter meetings in December and always produces the bulk of the trades made during the year.

Guidelines also were established for the right of a player to repeat a trade demand or to become a free agent again: from free agency to free agency and trade demand to free agency, an additional five years each, and from free agency to trade demand and trade demand to trade demand, three years each.

For several years, owners had tried to reduce the size of the roster from 25 players to 24 or 23, and they finally made a slight gain in that direction. The new agreement calls for a maximum roster of 25 players and a minimum of 24. If a roster falls below 24, a team has 48 hours, in addition to the time it takes a player to report, to restore the number to 24.

Because of the approximately 40 players who are unsigned this season, some rosters will look different next season, whether each has 24 or 25 players.

course, may sign contracts before the end of the season and thereby relinquish their free-agency eligibility. For those who remain unsigned, though, the commissioner, Bowie Kuhn, will hold a negotiation-rights draft, sometime between Nov. 1 and Nov. 15.

Compensation Provisions

The procedure will be the same each of the four years of the agreement, except that there will be no compensation from a player's new team to his old one under current contracts. Players becoming free agents under future contracts will be compensated for by choices in the June draft of high school and college players.

At the negotiation-rights draft, the clubs will select in the inverse order of their finish in the standings. Selections will be alternated by leagues.

Each club will be able to select negotiating rights to as many players as it desires, but a player will be removed from the eligibility list when 12 clubs (13 next year, after expansion) have designated him.

A free agent, no matter how talented he is, won't necessarily have to deal with the bottom 12 teams. Each team will name one player in each round, and if there are enough signed players available, as there could be this year, the first 12 clubs to choose aren't likely to select rights to the same player. Depending on the number of free agents available and their caliber, it very likely could take three or more rounds for one player to be designated by 12 teams, and these teams could run from the 24th to the first.

No matter how many players a team designates, there is a maximum number it may sign—one if there are one to 14 players in the free-agent pool, two if there are 15 to 33; three if there are 34 to 52; and so forth. Despite this limitation, a club may sign as many players as it might lose under the free-agency system.

Not all players have to be designated by 12 clubs. A club may pass in all rounds—it so chooses and not get involved in it bidding. However, if only one club or more selects negotiating rights to a player, it will be free to deal with all clubs.

Now, what happens if a player negotiates with 12 or 10 or six teams, but does not reach agreement with any of them?

If he isn't signed by Feb. 15, he must elect to submit himself to a drawing. Negotiating rights would be granted to four clubs determined by a drawing from among teams that indicated an interest in the player at the time of the drawing. These teams could be the same or he had been negotiating with, or new ones. Once a player signs with a club, that club may not sell him to another team until after the following June 15. It may try him for other players, though, if the player agrees to a trade. This provision was included to prevent a team from signing a player for something less than his market value, then selling him for more money and making a profit.

In a letter to the players that accompanied the agreement, Miller, executive director of the Players Association, called the terms "the greatest improvement in our data by the Players Association and members."

"Despite the reluctance of the owners to reach an agreement," he said, "the proposed new contracts are fair and equitable and contain the basis for a stable future for major league baseball."

Homer by Unser Answers 'Slur'

Special to The New York Times

MONTREAL, July 24—Joe Frazier picked up a Montreal newspaper this morning and the cold, black headline hit his eyes: "Deadwood Unser answers slur." The Met's manager struck his head in the dugout.

... a good talk with him in my office the night we traded him."

... The day after Unser and Wayne Garrett were traded to Montreal for Pepe Mangual and Jim Dwyer, Frazier reflected on the deal.

... "I think the trade we made was good," Frazier is quoted as saying, "because we had to get rid of a little deadwood. We got rid of one piece of deadwood."

... Frazier did not identify the individual. It was left to the listener's imagination if he meant Unser or Garrett.

... Montreal fans and the press translated it to mean Unser last night when Del stepped to the plate in the 11th inning at Jarry Park and deposited a Skip Lockwood fastball beyond the fence in right field for a home run that gave the Expos a 3-2 victory over the Mets.

... In his first appearance against his former team-mates, the 31-year-old Unser had led his new team to victory.

... "It's no slam against Del," Frazier insisted. "In this game you don't stay young. Everybody has to get old regardless of how good a ball-player you are. Ted Williams, Joe DiMaggio, Mickey Mantle, they all got old. Even the greats get old."

... "When I called Del in Tuesday night to tell him about the trade I explained to him that we had to make some changes. I told him we had a chance to get a younger player. We had to make the change. He understood. He has been in baseball long enough."

... The Yankee management declined to comment yesterday on some criticism delivered by Nettles, one of five unsigned Yankees (the others are Ken Holtzman, Doyle Alexander, Sandy Alomar and Elliott Maddox). He also complained that the club was willing to pay millions for free agents or players on other teams but were not offering their long-standing regulars equivalent pay.

... Ken Griffey opened the inning with a single and moved to third on a hit by Joe Morgan.

... Foster, who has led a clutch hitter for the Reds all season, knocked Phil Niekro out of the game with his game-winning hit. Niekro, whose won-lost record is now 10-6, had allowed only three hits by the Reds until the eighth.

... AT PHILADELPHIA—Dave Cash had an inside-the-park homer, two singles and two runs batted in as the Phillies beat the Pirates for the second

Dick Williams Out

Williams's Career Takes New Detour

By LEONARD KOPPELT

The dismissal of Dick Williams as manager of the California Angels Friday completes one of the more ironic sequences in baseball's long history of managerial shifts.

Twice during the last decade, in Boston in 1967 and in Oakland in 1973, Williams was hailed as a genius and as the "best" manager around.

But less than two years after he led the 1967 Red Sox into the World Series, he was in disfavor in Boston and dropped before the 1969 season ended.

In 1971, Charley Finley hired him to manage the Oakland A's, who had played under nine managers (one of them twice) in the preceding 10 seasons. Under Williams, the A's finished first in the Western Division in 1971, then won the World Series in 1972 and 1973.

Friction With Finley However, Williams had friction with Finley, as many other managers have had, and quit at the end of the 1973 season, even though he had just signed a long-term contract.

He then accepted an offer to manage the Yankees, to replace Ralph Houk, but Finley refused to release Williams from his obligation and got a court order to prevent him from going to New York.

So Williams, at the peak of managerial success and prestige, sat out the first half of the 1974 season in Florida, while Bill Virdon became manager of a Yankee team that went down to the last day of the season before losing the Eastern division title to Baltimore.

And Alvin Dark, taking over the A's, managed them to another World Series triumph. Meanwhile, in midseason, the Angels were in last place in the West. Gene Autry the owner, got Finley's permission to hire Williams, and disposed of Bobby Vickers.

Autry gave Williams a three-and-a-half year contract intended to make sure a long rebuilding program based entirely on young, fast players and strong pitching.

But the Angels lost the first 10 games of the season, and they finally made a slight gain in that direction. The new agreement calls for a maximum roster of 25 players and a minimum of 24.

Forego Triumphs In the Brooklyn

Greer star carried 125 pounds, Forego topped the highweight of 134 and Lord Rebeau ran with 116.

For yesterday's contest, Tommy Trotter, the Big A's racing secretary, adjusted his sights only slightly in assigning weights to these three candidates. Instead of conceding colish Pleasure nine pounds, Forego was asked to yield one pound less. Lord Rebeau had a two-pound advantage over his opponent in the Suburban with 114 pounds.

"Come what may," said Trotter as he rushed to lunch shortly after post time for yesterday's first race, "this Brooklyn field certainly is a gratifying one. It's much better than what we had for the Suburban. It's so well rounded it presents a strong possibility for a surprise winner."

From the standpoint of chalk players in yesterday's turnout of 20,864, the results of the program's first two races were disappointing. October House's $15,200-for-$2 May 1 Rule captured the opener and Sigmund Sommer's $3 Bidder ($1,400) took the second race. The combination, (-2) returned $14.40 for a $2 daily double ticket.

2 World Track Records Called Computer-Aided

LAGUNA BEACH, Calif. (AP)—A former Israeli discus thrower has developed a computer that analyzes body motions so precisely that he is credited with helping two men set world track and field records this year.

Dr. Gideon Ariel is now offering to perform his space-age analysis on all United States Olympic track and field team members, if the United States Olympic Committee will approve.

Ariel is a 37-year-old scientist from Tel Aviv, who was staking a little bit of science and computer science. His research over the last 10 years covers what makes up the perfect track and field performance, although his methods can be applied to any form of human activity, from walking to pounding stakes in the ground.

"The laws of physics apply to all body motion," he said, "and in track and field the motions are usually analyzed by coaches with the human eye. They see some things, but they do not see other things that might be very critical to an athlete's performance."

He said tiny flaws were often the difference between a good performance and a world record. A discus thrower, Mac Wilkins, and shot-putter, Terry Albritton, both credit Ariel with discovering minute errors they eventually corrected.

Ariel's method involves taking a film of the athlete performing his or her event, then breaking the film down frame by frame into stick drawings, using the joints as end-points for each line. "These stick drawings are placed over one another by the computer, and by that we can measure the angle the arms and legs are at during any split second, and we can measure the acceleration and the force."

Ariel said he determined "where the joints move, in exactly what direction, so we can calculate the velocity of each part of the body."

"For example, Bill Schmidt was throwing the javelin a little bit wrong in 1972. The computer said he should be able to break the world record but he was throwing 30 or 40 feet under it. But the computer also showed the tip of the javelin was rising too much just before he released it."

"The computer showed that he was dipping his right leg at the release point and he was staking a little bit like throwing from a falling elevator. The javelin was moving up."

Schmidt was made aware of the motion, corrected it and wound up by winning a bronze medal in the 1972 Munich Olympics.

Winnett and de Nemethy Still Seeking Olympic Gold in Dressage and Jumping

By ED CORRIGAN
Both Bert de Nemethy and John Winnett were in Europe a quarter of a century ago, but they were not acquainted.

De Nemethy was a Hungarian who had made his country's 1940 Olympic team, only to see the Games Show wiped out because of World War II. The war ended and he spent some time coaching European teams.

Winnett was an American who had spent most of his youth in France. The war had been difficult for Winnett, too. He had spent a lot of time hiding from the advancing Nazis before hostilities ended.

De Nemethy eventually made his way to the United States, where he became coach of the United States Equestrian Team's jumping squad in 1955. Winnett also headed back for the United States and began to concentrate on dressage.

Tops in U. S.
Both are still seeking that elusive pot of gold at the end of the rainbow in the Olympic Games. De Nemethy's jumping team will compete on Tuesday (individual) and Sunday (team). Winnett will compete in the dressage Wednesday and Thursday (team) and Friday (individual).

Except for the Olympic team gold medal, de Nemethy has won most of the top awards in the jumping world. In addition to winning the Pan-American Games medal, he also has produced the individual winner of the Olympic gold medal in Bill Steinkraus.

Winnett's climb has been more difficult. He has participated in the Olympics and world championships, but his main glory was in the last Pan-American Games, where he helped win the gold medal. He also has developed into the top dressage rider in the United States.

"We have a strong team," de Nemethy said before heading for Montreal. "We should be a contender for the gold medal. But of course no one knows what will happen on a given day. In the equestrian world, you know, the horse is the big factor. And he can't tell you when he's sick out of sorts."

De Nemethy, whose team lost the gold medal to West Germany by just one-quarter of a fault in the 1972 Games, ticked off four countries that could win the gold medal this year.

"West Germany should be the favorite," he said. "But we are a contender and so are Italy and France."

"The West German team appears to have the most experience. They have the same problem as most of us, their horses. They'll be using most of the same horses they had in 1972. They need some new ones."

"But on the other hand, the horses they have are experienced and that counts for a lot in something like the Olympics."

De Nemethy said the United States horses were considerably less experienced than in the past.

"We don't have one big standout," he said. "In other days, we have come up with horses like Sam Lucas and Snowbound. Still, we have the best available."

This will mark the first Olympics in which Frank Chapot has acted as captain of the team. In other years, it has been Steinkraus, now retired as an active rider and serving as president of the team.

"Frank's a remarkable rider," de Nemethy said. "He's experienced and knows what to do with a horse. I put him on a horse called Viscount at Cologne, the last show of our European tour last spring. It was in the Grand Prix and marked the first time Frank had ridden Viscount in that kind of competition. He finished a remarkable four."

The other riders on the team are Buddy Brown, Dennis Murphy, Bob Ridland and Mike Matz.

Brown Most Likely
Winnett realizes that the United States dressage riders are far from the favorites. But he's still confident.

"Realistically," he said before heading for the Games, "we know we won't win the gold or silver medals. But the bronze, that's another story. We feel we have a shot at it."

"Of course, all of us [Edith Master, Dorothy Morris and Hilda Gurney, his teammates] will have to be in top form at the same time."

"But that's not impossible. After all, the same conditions hold for all the teams. All of us think we have improved considerably."

2 Catch Nicklaus Early in Third Round

WINDSOR, Ontario, July 24 (AP) — It looked like about anybody's tournament midway through the third round today of the Canadian open golf championship.

Jack Nicklaus, who was the leader after two rounds with a six-under-par 134, saw his lead vanish in the early going today when Bob Wynn, one of his threesome partners, whittled two strokes off the lead and pulled into a dead-lead after five holes.

Jerry Heard also picked up two strokes on par to join Wynn and Nicklaus at six under over the par-70, 6,696-yard Essex Golf and Country Club course.

The last of the contenders didn't see off until after noon, and it looked as if it would be late afternoon before a leader could be determined.

The championship round in this $200,000 tournament will be held tomorrow.

Just one stroke off the lead in the early going was Ben Srenshaw after eight holes, while the United States Open champion, Jerry Pate, and Lyn Lott were next at four under after the sixth and fifth holes, respectively.

Arnold Palmer, just three the day, dropped from the leader board with a poor start.

Nicklaus has been runner-up in the Canadian open three times. It is the only major national championship that has eluded him in his career.

The leader in the clubhouse at mid-afternoon was Bill Kratzert at 212, a lead that would not hold "than a few hours."

How to Approach Accurately: Use Landmarks, Know Limits

By NICK SELTZ

The late Chris Dumphy, the benevolent dictator who ran the Seminole Golf Club in Florida, had a favorite club—a 6-wood. He knew exactly how far he could hit it, and he used it shrewdly to win many a money game.

Dumphy liked to go out early in the morning and position the tee markers himself. If he had an important match that day, so the story goes, the par-3 holes would just happen to play the precise distance Dumphy could hit his 6-wood.

Weekend golfers could use that kind of help. We often lose strokes because we misjudge the distance on approach shots or pick the wrong club or both, particularly on strange courses.

The touring pros have a built-in advantage over the rest of us. Their caddies research yardages that are accurate to the inch. Where you and I are guessing, Jack Nicklaus knows it is 173½ yards to the pin. He can choose a club and swing it with confidence.

How can we judge distance and club ourselves better? First determine how far you hit each club. It does no good to know your target is 173½ yards away if you have no idea whether you should hit a 5-iron or a 5-wood from that distance.

If you play most of your golf on one course, work out the yardage to the green from conspicuous landmarks on par-4 and par-5 holes. If it's 140 yards from the tall tree on the 14th fairway to the green, you should be aware of that checkpoint.

Bear in mind that the location of the cup can make a difference of two or three clubs on today's big greens. A green that is 100 feet deep could call for a 6-iron when the cup is in front and a 4-iron when it's in back. Consider the location of the cup before you choose a club.

Most golfers are chronically short with their approach shots, even though the trouble on modern courses usually is in front of the green.

How many times did you get your approach shots to the hole the last time you played? If the answer is "Not

Wheelchair Olympics Open Aug. 3

LEXINGTON, Ky., July 21 (UPI)—Another set of Olympics Games is scheduled for Canada this summer with athletes from more than 70 countries participating and the likelihood of any boycotts is almost nonexistent.

It's the Para-Olympics at Toronto featuring athletes competing in wheelchairs.

In Lexington, Ky., next week, several of the top United States wheelchair athletes will meet to prepare for the Para-Olympics, slated to begin Aug. 3 and run through Aug. 11.

The major focus will be on wheelchair basketball, a sport that has gained the most publicity in the United States and a sport where the United States, like its regular Olympic counterparts, has done well in recent years.

Dr. Stan Labanowich, the commissioner of the National Wheelchair Basketball Association and a professor at the University of Kentucky's department of health, physical education and recreation, is heading the workshop that will not only prepare the athletes for the upcoming Para-Olympics but help others create interest in wheelchair athletics.

The workshops, which begin Tuesday and run through Thursday, will focus on wheelchair basketball for the men's and women's teams that will try to defend titles won in the last Para-Olympics in 1972 in West Germany. The Para-Olympics began in 1960 in Rome and have been held every four years since then.

"Many people only think of wheelchair sports in terms of basketball, but there are many other activities played on an extremely competitive basis," Labanowich said. "For example, in the games next month, there will be competition in track and field, swimming, archery, table tennis, billiards and fencing."

But the interest in wheelchair basketball is the highest, he concedes.

"We have international championships every year in England, and Israel is the defending champion in that competition and will provide the stiffest tests for our team along with Argentina," Labanowich noted.

Wheelchair basketball on a national level is played according to National Collegiate Athletic Association rules with certain necessary modifications. Instead of a three-second rule in the key, there is a six-second regulation. The Para-Olympic competition will feature international rules, similar to those employed during the Olympic basketball contests.

"I think you will find that in wheelchair basketball, the scores are a bit lower than regular games, but the statistics aren't that far off from college levels," Labanowich said. "We have guys that can shoot 55 to 60 percent from the field."

He also notes the added benefits from wheelchair basketball.

"The excitement people who are handicapped enjoy from active participation is great, and this is certainly important," he said.

Net Event Wood, Field and Stream: Eager Dolphine Saves 100 Women

By NELSON BRYANT

SPECIAL TO THE NEW YORK TIMES

NAGS HEAD, N. C.—Beneath a long, trailing raft of eel grass that had been borne by the wind and tide from the vast, shallow reaches of Pamlico, Albemarle, Currituck or Croatan Sounds some 35 miles offshore to the edge of the Gulf Stream, we found a school of dolphin eager to take whatever we offered them.

The reference is, of course, to the fish, not the highly intelligent mammal of the same name.

In summer the dolphin is one of the mainstays of North Carolina offshore angling, a splendid, handsome, hard-fighting and tasty creature that reaches a weight of well beyond 50 pounds, although the average is much smaller.

Joel Arrington of Raleigh, N. C., Miss Anna Kitchin of Scotland Neck, N. C., and I had set forth from Oregon Inlet before dawn aboard Capt. Murray Cudworth's Fish N' Fool, with Mitchell Estaman as mate.

After several hours of trolling for billfish—blue and white marlin and sailfish—had produced only two blacktip sharks and one skipjack tuna, Cudworth looked for a bed of floating weed, for dolphin favor such a location. Within their range, and at the proper time of year, they are often found under almost any floating object from logs to hatch covers.

A valuable trick in catching dolphin when drifting and casting bait or lures to them is to keep one hooked member of the school in the water.

at all times. If that is done, the others will usually remain close by.

We took the first few fish on bait—murreling at their acrobatics above and below water and their beautiful iridescence that fades with the approach of death—before switching to a variety of lures and tackle, including small jigs and spoons and flyrods, and flies or popping bugs.

The locating of the dolphin injected much-needed zest into what had been a rather tedious day for all hands. Added to our long hours of inactivity was the effect of heavy seas, Arrington and I were queasy and Miss Kitchin was ill. She showed remarkable good spirit, however, even joining the dolphin-catching between trips to the rail.

The following day, Arrington and I decided to make an all-out effort for billfish, and stuck to trolling all day with another Oregon Inlet boat, the Sport, with Billy Holton as captain and Buddy Twitford as mate. We had, however, picked a bad two days for billfish and our tally at the end of the second day was one 15-pound yellowfin tuna landed and two of the same species lost.

The more than 30 Oregon Inlet charter-boat skippers—there is one party boat there also—are a hard-working, competent lot, are large, fast and the average is 11 hours, be A.M.

18-21 Circuit Is Opened In Tennis

By CHARLES FRIEDMAN

Question: Who are the forgotten players in American tennis?

Answer: Those between 18 and 21 years of age. They are too old for the juniors, yet aren't experienced enough to get into major tournaments.

There is a large body of players in that category. Now, finally, they are getting an opportunity for recognition as the new 21-year-and-under division opened its circuit yesterday.

"The division will provide opportunities for many more good players who need exposure," says Start Malless, president of the United States Tennis Association. "In the past, only a handful of young players—those on the Junior Davis Cup and Junior Wightman Cup teams—could get that exposure."

Six tournaments are scheduled, with the first at North Conway, N.H. There has been a flood of entries from all over the country for each event, says Seena Hamilton of New York, chairman of the circuit. Amateurs and pros are eligible.

Bill Graves, coach of the Junior Davis Cup team, they represent the cream of the age group.

The U.S.T.A. has come around to the 21's rather late. An international 21's circuit has been established for many years. Many foreign players now have applied to join the American circuit.

"This is a critical age in tennis," says Miss Hamilton, who headed the Easter Bowl junior tournament, one of the biggest in the country. "It could be a stepping stone for these kids to the professional ranks."

With the sponsorship of Manufacturers Hanover Trust, some of the tournaments will have prize money. The national championships will be held Aug. 16 at the Columbia Tennis Center here, which has expanded its seating capacity.

The new division will have its own rankings. In addition, results will count toward being ranked in the men's and women's division of the U.S.T.A.

"Given a chance," says Miss Hamilton, "several players in the 21's could do well in big-time tournaments. Butch Waits of the University of Southern California beat Cliff Richey last winter, and Peter Fleming of U.C.L.A. has had victories over 10 or 12 as good as those two."

The new circuit will enable

Jersey Open Title Retained by Kiefer

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

SPECIAL TO THE NEW YORK TIMES

WEST ORANGE, N. J., July 23—Jack Kiefer intends to go out on the Professional Golfers' Association tour "sometimes this fall." At age 36, he might be one of the oldest tour rookies in P.G.A. history.

But he was young in spirit and "full of confidence" today when he won the New Jersey State Golf Association open championship for the second straight year. The victory, forged through a heavy downpour at Essex County Country Club, strengthened his determination to set out in quest of greater glories by playing the pro tour each week. He won a $2,500 first prize today.

Kiefer, a native of Lancaster, Pa., shot three-under-par 36, 32—68, in the third round, when the long Essex County course was damped from an early morning rain. This moved him into the lead by four strokes entering the fourth and final round. Then, when the afternoon downpour began, he waded to a 36, 38—74 for a one-under-par 283 to win easily.

Nine strokes back at 292 was Bruce Young, the professional at Musconetcong. This former Rutgers University golfer shot a one-over-par 72 this morning, and then had 36, 38—74 this afternoon.

Russ Helwig of Essex Fells and Mike Zack of Baltusrol were tied for third place at 293.

The group to play six straight weeks. Those who produce the best records will probably get into the United States Open championships, at Forest Hills Sept. 1.

The schedule:

- July 25—University of Buffalo
- Aug. 2—John Mott Parkway T.C., Utica, N.Y.
- Aug. 8—Merion Cricket Club, Philadelphia (rest only)
- Aug. 16—National Championships, Columbia Tennis Center, Sept. 1—Port Washington, (L.I.) Tennis Academy and Shelter Rock Tennis Club, Manhasset, L.I.

Tioga Park Cancels Portion of Schedule

NICHOLS, N.Y., July 24 (AP)—Tioga Park has canceled its Tuesday-night racing schedules for this season because there are not enough quarter horses at the track to hold races six days a week, according to Jacob Iberger, president and general manager.

Iberger said the track did not have sufficient barn space. Only 300 horses can be housed there now, but planned barn construction will give the track capacity to house 1,067 horses.

Ring Hater Becomes Ju

By LENA WILLIAMS

Frank Shain was an avid boxing fan. He would rather go to a boxing match than to a movie or a baseball doubleheader or out to dinner. Eva Shain, his wife, couldn't stand boxing. She refused to go to the fights with sports her husband, even after he had become a boxing judge. "I didn't want to watch two men beating each other up in the ring," said Mrs. Shain. "Besides, there were never any women at the fights, only a bunch of men."

After years of persuasion, Mrs. Shain finally acceded to her husband's request and attended a Golden Gloves competition at Madison Square Garden 13 years ago.

She was surprised not only by the beauty of boxing but also by the number of women who were avid boxing fans. Now it's Mrs. Shain who can't stay away from a boxing match. Only an emergency will keep her away.

Last year she became one of three women to obtain licenses to judge boxing from the New York State Athletic Commission. Carol Polis was the first woman boxing judge to be licensed by the commission, on Oct. 2, 1974. Mrs. Shain and Carol Castellano were both licensed on Oct. 1, 1975.

And now Mrs. Shain, in her late 40s, believes that judging boxing is something she was destined to do.

"A Critic's Eye"

"From the beginning, I watched each fight with a critic's eye," she recently recalled during an interview. "I always tried to pick out the more aggressive fighter, then wait to hear the judges' decisions at the end of the bout to see how closely they coincided with my own."

"Few people notice the strategies involved in boxing. Few realize the months each fighter spends preparing for a fight. And the camaraderie in the fight business is one that can be found in no other sport."

With help from Johnny DeFoe, head coach of the Police Athletic League boxing team, and a few close friends and acquaintances in the sport, she got her first opportunity to judge a Golden Gloves competition in 1964.

New to group travel, the author was wary; then 14 elephants stopped by for a drink.

ments.

In Nairobi, at a different hotel from the one promised in the brochure, the 40 of us assigned to Group D were sorted out and told to place our bags outside our rooms by 7 A.M. the next morning. The brochure had said we'd have a couple of days in town to pick up an authentic safari wardrobe at the famous Ahamed Brothers. Oh well, we were eager to get on with it.

Caucusing at breakfast, our bloc of four voted to invite Toni and Carol, two nurses from Washington, to join our bus. Lacking a clear choice for a seventh passenger, we left things to chance. At the last minute a haggard-looking fellow in a rumpled suit and tie was led to our car. General Tours had oversubscribed the charter trip by one and our new companion, Frank, an engineer also from Wash- ington, had arrived moments before on a delayed commercial flight routed through Frankfurt. (He had, however, been given $100 by the tour company for his troubles.)

We were off! We really were, and we had barely finished our introductions. Sarah, Victor, Susan, Kevin, Toni, Carol and Frank. For the next 10 days the occupants of Bus 4 rode together, squabbled, bitched and joked together, generally ate lunch together, often ate dinner together, and together experienced an inundation of visual stimuli unlike anything we had ever seen before. The net effect on all of us was profound and humble awe.

Magical encounters cannot be reproduced on paper. The wonder of spotting your first giraffe ambling peacefully alongside the road cannot be communicated. Nor can the thrill of sipping after-dinner Kenyan coffee on the terrace at Voi, an elegant wood and stone lodge in Tsavo East National Park, your very first night on safari, when without warning 14 elephants arrive to drink at a water hole a few yards away.

What do you do when 14 elephants stop by unexpectedly after dinner? In my case, I dropped my coffee cup and my companions, scrambled down a precipitous flight of stone steps to a secret "hide" at the end of a camouflaged, dark tunnel and tried not to giggle as I fended off a suddenly materialized, amorous Italian tourist—all in utter silence because the sign says don't scare off the animals with unexpected noises.

Unfortunately, the elephants got the message they were being intruded upon before the message got through to the Italian. They formed a defensive perimeter with stunning precision, waited it out for a nervous stretch and departed—backwards and watchfully. I returned to my cold coffee, and an argument over whether elephants were really matriarchal.

Voi, perhaps because it was the first lodge we stayed at, remains the most vivid. At 4 A.M., still wide awake from a combination of elephants, arguments, Italians and jet lag, I trained my binoculars on a herd of Cape buffalo drinking and wallowing in a muddy pool in view of my window. When light dawned, they silently moved away, like somnambulists. As I watched the last movements of the

What follows is a suggested rough itinerary of a summer journey through the uncrowded West—a pilgrimage to scenic spots that even at the height of the tourist season are apt to be fairly peaceful. I believe them to be equal, in terms of natural splendor, to their heavily-trafficked cousins. And the joy of discovering them without bumper-to-bumper company can make them even more pleasurable. I would suggest that anyone planning to follow the entire itinerary should figure on a minimum of 21 days for the trip.

The itinerary follows a squiggly sort of long oval beginning and ending in Denver. Motels and campgrounds can be found within striking distance of each destination. You might have to take a graded dirt road to reach one, but those dirt roads often explain why such spots are still relatively quiet. Be adventurous. Take hiking boots. Carry a jug of water. In plotting a route from one to the other on a map, you might find you have to double back over a road in order to reach every destination. So what? It's worth the effort. If you measure your enjoyment by miles-per-hour, these places aren't for you. If you'd rather be the first in your neighborhood to see the Canyon de Chelly rather than the last to see the Grand Canyon, read on.

A few final preliminary notes: I've deliberately left out northernmost Montana and Idaho, southernmost Arizona and New Mexico, and Nevada because they would make the oval simply too huge. Also, I would recommend that you call ahead a few days for overnight reservations since accommodations are not exactly abundant (the standard guidebooks like Fodor, AAA and Mobil are usually reliable for names of motels or campgrounds).

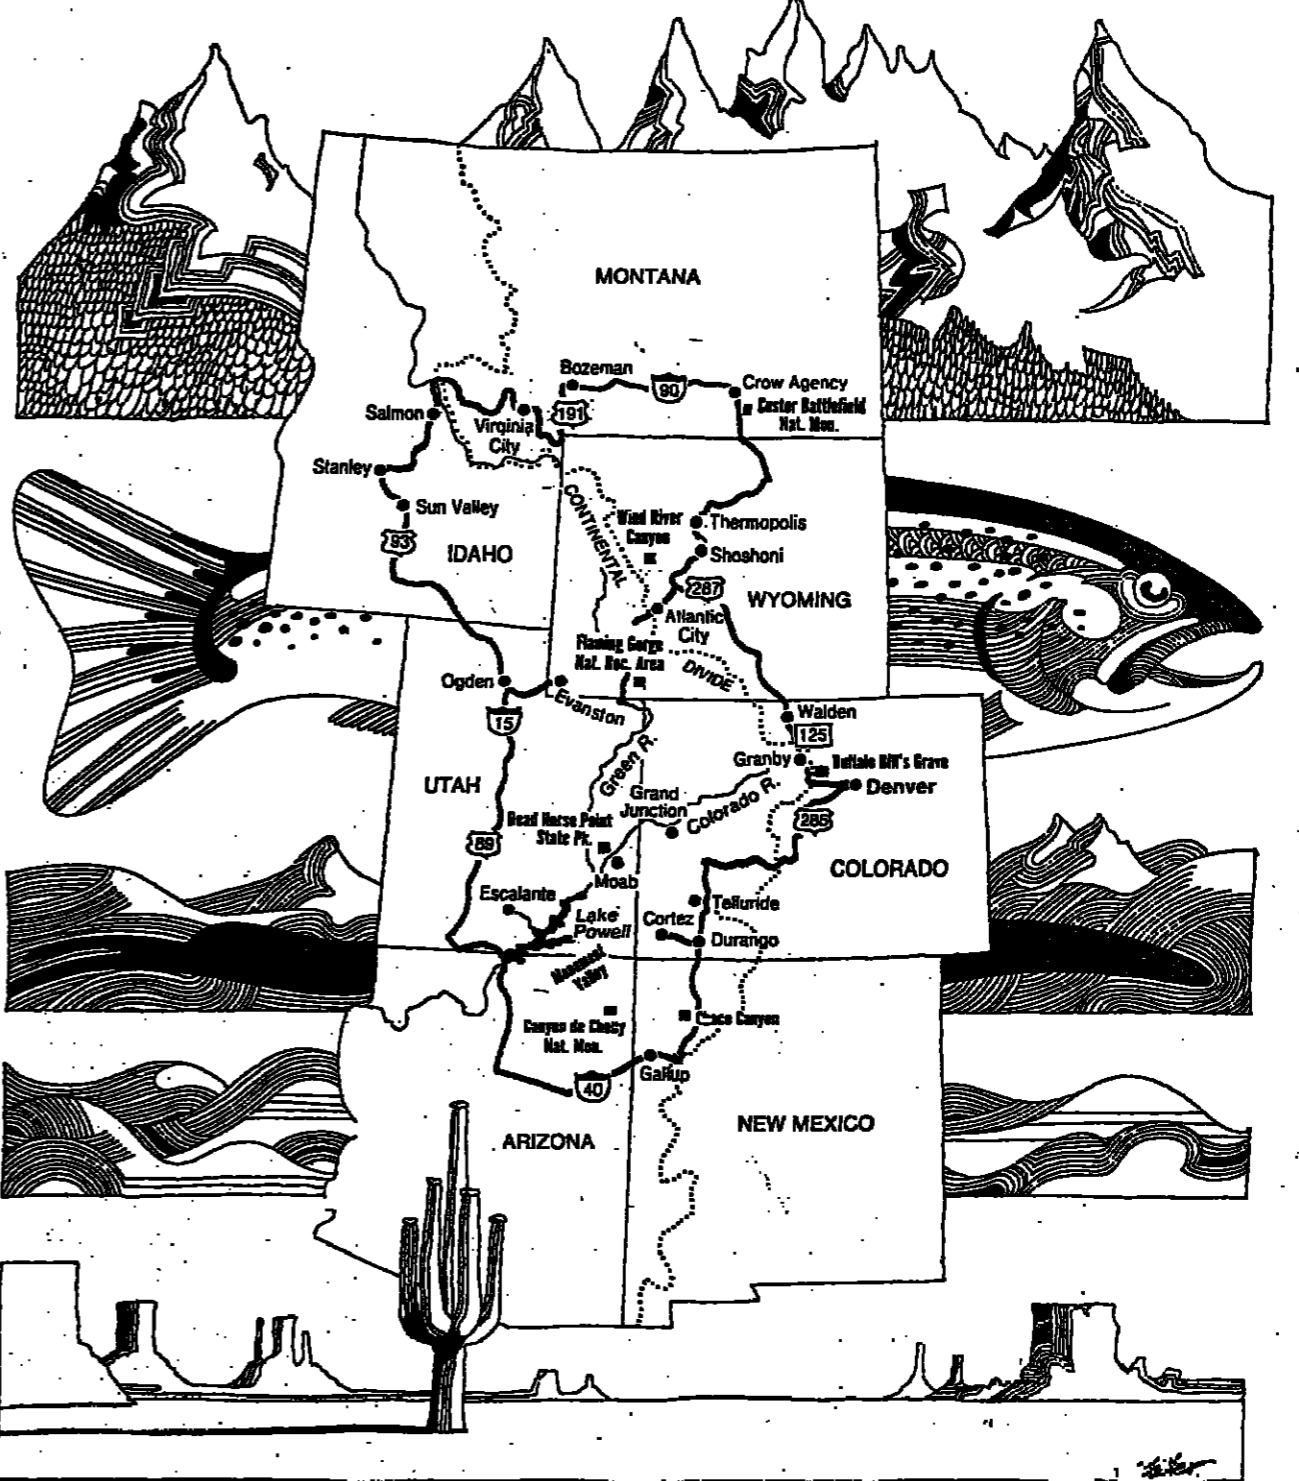

Introduction—Colorado Rockies: If you've flown to Denver, pick up your rental car at the airport and get right on Interstate 70 West. In a half-hour you'll be climbing out of the smog into the Rockies. Somewhere near Buffalo Bill's grave on Lookout Mountain, 20 miles from Denver, the road hits a rise and suddenly, the naked gray-lavender (sometimes snow-capped) peaks of the Continental Divide loom across the windshield like a Cinemascope postcard.

Turn north onto U.S. 40 toward Empire, zigzag through Berthoud Pass, gaze at the classic profiles of mountains studded with aspens and conifers, keep going through Granby, turn north on State Route 125 to Walden and then fork to the right onto State Route 127 to get to the Wyoming line. Congratulations—you have just crossed the Continental Divide twice, bypassed Rocky Mountain National Park and not collected $200.

The Snowy Range: Route 130 through Medicine Bow National Forest. This is lovely tundra country comparable to that along Trail Ridge Road in Rocky Mountain National Park. Pick a bouquet of wildflowers for your picnic lunch table. Have a snowball fight, especially since it's summer. (It isn't called the Snowy Range for nothing.)

Atlantic City and South Pass City: Marjane Amble, an editor of the weekly environmental newspaper, High Country News, published in Lander, Wyo., doesn't want you to know about Wyoming's Atlantic City.

Capturing Florence in a Single Piazza

HERBERT R. LOTTMAN

I had a fitful sleep—too much good wine—I woke up in a stuffy hotel one morning and set quickly to walk around the city. When I finally looked at my watch, I found it was only 7 A.M. The wide sweep of the Piazza Signoria, site of the medieval Palazzo Vecchio—Florence's city hall—the Uffizi Gallery, its greatest art museum, no caffè had opened its shutters that early hour. But the restaurant and caffè chairs and tables had left out overnight. I sat down in a chair belonging to a restaurant in the Bargello and watched the city from my vantage point I could take in the facade of the Palazzo Vecchio, the government of all Florentines including the fabled Medici replica of Michelangelo's family of David stands just left of the main portal. To my right, I could see the sculpture in that open arcade known as the Loggia: Benvenuto Cellini's bronze Perseus and Giambologna's Rape of the Sabines last a curiosity, because it is that the sculptor had no sub-all in mind when he put together the young man carrying the young woman, with an arm looking on. A friend suggested the title when the work was done.

In the center I could make out the plaque in the pavement which marked the spot where Savonarola's single-minded Dominican ruled Florence between two wars, was hanged and burned at the stake. I saw above the roofs of the palazzi surrounding the square the graceful Badia church with its masterpieces (and where I lectured on a famous neighbor, Dante) and the fortress of the Bargello (now Florence's sculpture museum). Not to that polychrome marvel was Florence's single greatest architectural masterpiece, Giotto's or adjoining the cathedral on the Piazza della Signoria, I saw, is also the terminal of the evening and Sunday stroll—the passeggiata.

The city has a population of nearly half a million, and in addition to being the capital of its province (encompassing smaller surrounding towns) it is now also the capital of Tuscany, one of Italy's newly established regions. Within Tuscany are nine provinces, including Pisa, Siena, Leghorn and Arezzo, with well over eight million inhabitants. As the center of the region, Florence is a city of white-collar workers; it is also a city of craftsmen in leather and other fine goods. There are few large companies here, no major industry. The tourist trade as such accounts for only 5 percent of the city's revenue, but of course most of the small crafts here depend on what tourists buy: shoes and handbags, luggage and leather trinkets, fine jewelry, my favorite neckties.

Thinking about them walking across the piazza toward the Palazzo Vecchio, I noticed that there was more movement in the square now; dawn had become morning. Cleaning squads were at work in the three banks across the square, readying the banks for their early (8:20 A.M.) opening to the public. Shutters began to roll up here and there, unveiling the shops and bars. The owner of the Bargello restaurant arrived with cartons of foodstuffs and kindly let me sit on. Employees filed into the Palazzo Vecchio. The building is as important today as it was centuries ago, object of much national and even international curiosity; Florence's Communist Mayor, a no-nonsense young executive named Elio Gabbugiani, presides over a coalition of Communist and Socialist city councilmen.

On this square a tourist can eat and drink, buy a newspaper, souvenirs or travel books, postcards (at the kiosk on the northwest corner) and stamps (at the tobacco shop just behind it), even film or sunglasses (at an optician's in the Assicurazioni Generali building). The square contains only one shock shop (expensive reproductions and still worse original art, souvenirs ranging from porcelain animals to Chianti wine). Just 25 feet off the piazza, technically at the beginning of the Via dei Calzaiuoli, there is a pharmacy open 24 hours a day.

But the most significant shop on the square is one that I hadn't noticed at all, for it was just behind my back as I sat at the Bargello table. The Agenzia Enologica Italiana bears a name and displays wares that many tourists will not be able to identify at all. "Enological" is, of course, a Latin-rooted word for that which has to do with wine. This firm, whose sign says that it was founded in 1874, deals in paraphernalia for winegrowers and winemakers: pressing and distilling equipment, bottles and corks and corking machines, and how-to books to go with the machinery. The people who begin frequenting the shop in the early morning say a good deal more about the real nature of Florence and its province than the tourist facilities already mentioned. They are the Tuscan winegrowers, with gnarled fists and creased faces, product of a lifetime of long days in sun and rain (more often the former than the latter). Tuscany is above all an agricultural center and has been so since the Etruscans farmed it. Produce includes grains, sugar beets, but the most important is wine grapes—this is Chianti country after all.

Then, clockwise around the square, No. 5 is a small building with a neoclassical facade housing a national savings bank (Cassa di Risparmio). The upstairs floors shelter the city's collection of contemporary art, the only such in Florence. Known as Raccolta d'Arte Contemporanea Alberto della Ragione, this gallery shows works of masters such as Marino Marini and Giorgio de Chirico. Marini's modernist

The replica of Michelangelo's David stands guard at the medieval Palazzo Vecchio, where the Medici once lived.

Later that day, lunching at the same restaurant table, I tried to see the square not as a tourist might, but as it could appear to the Tuscan farmer or worker or businessman. I saw a vast L-shaped square whose buildings were of varying styles but similar enough in height and other proportions, and in their rust-colored stone or stucco finish, to seem to co-exist in harmony. On this closer look, the building to my immediate left (with "Assicurazioni Generali—Venezia" boldly lettered on the facade) seemed overly pretentious. The ground floor of this late 19th-century imitation of a Renaissance palace contains the famous Rivoire coffee and pastry-cholelate shop, elegant indoors, but much like all the other caffès on the square in summertime, when all the tables and their occupants tend to look like all the other tables and their occupants. For in summer the crowd of tourists is dense here; it's harder to spot a native, harder to imagine that this square belongs, eminently, to Florentines—unless you're up early in the morning.

Now it was time to look inside the Palazzo Vecchio, but first I passed the statue of a lion known as the Marzocco, a copy of a Donatello sculpture. Though it is dwarfed by Michelangelo's David and the other statuary on the square and in the adjacent Loggia, it is the symbol of the city's power. I once read that prisoners from the rival city-state of Pisa had been forced to kiss its hind.

Entering the main portal, I crossed the first patio with its bronze cherub fountain designed by Vasari, the centerpiece by Verocchio, has relief columns, a vaulted ceiling in the grotesque manner. I passed through a series of courtyards and found myself in an office area closed to the public.

Even though the public may visit only 30 percent of the entire area of this palazzo that covers a large city block, I learned from city architect Piero Micheli, director of the Fine Arts office, that nearly 80 percent of the monumental halls—those of artistic value—are now open to visitors. (Weekdays, 9 A.M. to 7 P.M.; Sundays, 9-12; closed Saturdays. Admission: about 25 cents, Sundays free.) The Sala dei Dugento is used for monthly meetings of the city council, and visitors are permitted into this room when the council is in session. The apartments of Medici Pope Leone X, with their fresco history of the Medici, are also closed to the public; they are the offices of the mayor and his chief aides.

To see the monumental halls, the visitor first enters the vast Sala del Cinquecento—once the hall of the Great Council—with its battle scenes by Vasari and his pupils. There follow the superb studio of Francesco de Medici; the wildly decorated apartments of Eleonora di Toledo (my favorite room here has a curious ceiling painted in what is called Pompeian grotesque); the Sala di Gigli, with its ornate ceiling and window view over the Duomo and the adjacent Sala dell'Udienza.

Starting this year the collection of Charles Loeser, an American who lived in Florence and willed his art to the city before his death in 1928, is open after having been closed for several years. It includes a curious Piero di Cosimo fantasy, Passion of Christ, a breathtaking Ferrara school fresco, and Florentine primitives. (You may have to wait your turn to enter these five small rooms during popular viewing hours.) If you are game, climb to the tower for a matchless view of the little world of the Medici. The prison in this tower hosted Cosimo de Medici before his exile, and Savonarola before his execution.

Outside again, stand for a while in the Loggia, not so much to examine the second-rate statuary that swamps the one or two fine works in it, as to evoke another corner of Florence as it was and remains. The Loggia was the site of major outdoor ceremonies of the city-state, and undoubtedly served as shelter from sun or rain at other times. Today idle Florentines continue to use it to pass the time of day. Multilingual recordings give a brief history of the square (charge: about 10 cents).

Between the Loggia and the Palazzo Vecchio is the Uffizi Gallery, filled with a dazzling display of works by Leonardo and Botticelli, Filippo Lippi and Fra Angelico, Michelangelo and Raphael, as well as great Venetian, Dutch, Flemish and German paintings. The gallery is open from 9 A.M. to 2 P.M., Sundays and holidays from 9 to 1; closed Mondays. Admission: about 25 cents, Sundays free. To visit the Vasari self-portrait gallery bridging the Arno river, make reservations when purchasing your regular ticket on Wednesday and Saturday mornings. Visitors are taken through (no more than 25 or 30 at a time) at 10 A.M. on Wednesdays, 10 and 11:30 A.M. on Saturdays.

The best restaurant on the square, with outdoor service in fine weather, is Cavallino (closed Wednesdays), with pasta dishes to 80 cents, main courses from $1.50; you can dine well for under $5. Inside there are vaulted ceilings and no-nonsense decor, so-so paintings on the walls. Crowded, clean. I'd be ungrateful if I failed to mention the Bargello, where pasta runs to 80 cents, main dishes from $1.80 to $2.50. But better to leave the square (perhaps via the narrow passage between the Loggia and the Ristorante Orcagna at No. 1) for the Via Lambertesca a few hundred feet south. Here I found the most unusual restaurant in the whole city. Trattoria Antico Fattore serves traditional (often farmers') food such as crostini—chicken liver canapés—at 50 cents, pappa al pomodoro (a thick bread and tomato soup) at 40 cents, sausages and beans all "uccelletto"—cooked in oil with sage, onion and tomatoes—at $2. Other main dishes run to $2.20. Note that all Italian restaurants add a "bread and cover" charge ranging from 30 to 50 cents, seldom higher.

Caffè on the square range from the posh Rivoire to the nameless holes-in-the-wall that expand infinitely, thanks to their outdoor tables in warm weather. Rivoire (closed Mondays) serves espresso coffee at the counter for 20 cents, at tables indoors or out for 40 cents; cappuccino 25 and 50 cents. I Lorenzaccio on the northeast corner of the square: espresso 15 to 30 cents, cappuccino 20 to 40 cents, and pizzas from 90 cents to $1.40 (besides regular meals).

What's Doing in the HAMPTONS

By PRANAY GUPTA

BASICs—The Hamptons are a summer state of mind, weighted with emotional laissez-faire — a playground for the wealthy in their pillared villas and for singles of more limited income who go "shares" in communal rented houses. When people speak of the Hamptons, they are referring mainly to communities in two townships in Suffolk County, Southampton and East Hampton, both on Long Island's bucolic South Fork. Their year-round population is about 54,000; during the summer, vacationers lift it to more than 200,000.

GETTING AROUND — Most communities of the Hamptons are only 50 to 100 miles from the city, but the horrendous weekend traffic on the highways makes it seem much farther. The best bet is the Long Island Rail Road, which during the summer months, runs additional trains. The ride to the Hamptons takes about three hours. If driving, don't leave the city between 4 and 10 P.M. on Fridays because traffic then is at its heaviest. Avoid the Long Island Expressway and the Southern State Parkway if possible. From the city you can take Northern Boulevard (State Route 2A) or the Grand Central Parkway, which feed into the Northern State Parkway. Follow Northern State to its end, where it joins the Veterans Memorial Highway in Hauppauge. Take the highway south to the Long Island Expressway at Exit 57, then go east on the Expressway to Exit 70 and take County Road 111 south to Sunrise Highway. Sunrise will take you to the Hamptons. For those who do not have a car and cannot hitch a ride, the Hampton Jetty Service (516-726-9511) operates minibuses to and from New York City and within the Hamptons. One way from New York costs $12 a person. It is advisable to make reservations.

THE BEACHES—This is where the Hamptons culture is on display all summer and into the fall. Some of the beaches are reserved for town residents, but the enterprising visitor will not lack for sand. For example, at the western fringe of the Hamptons is Smith Point County Park, which is open daily from 10 A.M. to 5:30 P.M. through Sept. 12. Picnicking as well as swimming are permitted and the only fee is a 75-cent toll for the Smith Point Bridge, which can be reached via the William Floyd Parkway, off Exit 68 of the southbound Long Island Expressway. The Southampton town beach in Westhampton is open to the general public from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. every day through Sept. 6, and while there is no admission, there is a $3 parking fee per day, or $25 for the season. Lots of singles here. Tiana Beach in Southampton town also has the same hours and parking rates and is open through Sept. 6, as is Ponguogue Beach near the resort community of Quogue. Other public Southampton beaches with the same rates and hours are Foster Memorial, Flying Point and Macox Bay. For information on weather and water conditions, call the town's Recreation Department at 516-728-4554. East Hampton is a bit less liberal about the use of its beaches by outsiders and this is reflected in strict parking policies. But many summer visitors park their cars a distance away and stroll onto the beaches; no one asks for credentials. Both the village beach and Georgica Beach—intended for use by local residents—are popular spots for celebrity watching. On any given day you might run into George Clooney or Truman Capote or Norman Mailer. Hither Hills State Park in Montauk, which charges $2 admission per person, has excellent beaches, a grocery store and a refreshment stand. It is open through Sept. 6 from 9 A.M. to 7 P.M. on weekdays and 9 A.M. to 8 P.M. on weekends. If you want to sun or swim in the nude, try Sage Beach at the end of Gibson Lane in Sagaponack, where many families show up in the buff. There is no admission charge but the parking fee is $3 daily or $25 for the season. The beach is open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. through Sept. 6.

WHERE THE SINGLES ARE—Those looking for "action" flock to the Atlantic Avenue Beach (commonly known as Asparagus Beach) in Amagansett, about 95 miles from New York City. About gansett is part of the town of East Hampton and only East Hampton residents and summer guests can park by the beach. Day trippers are not excluded, however, and all they have to do is find a legal parking space back from the shore and walk to the ocean. One can almost invariably find parking space within a half mile of the beach, certainly at the railroad station if nowhere else—but not on someone's lawn or driveway. Asparagus Beach got its name—according to one popular legend—because, around 4 P.M. on weekends and often on weekdays as well, the women who have no dates for the evening rise, stretch and slowly parade toward the water, resembling a crop of asparagus stalks. The beach fashions are the latest, with a tangle of string bikinis on show—and nudging is getting more common. In the evening there are often bonfires and beach parties, but sleeping on the beach overnight is banned. There are no special hours and no admission fee.

DINING OUT—Restaurant-hopping is a ritual in the Hamptons during the summer. Gosman's Restaurant, on West Lake Drive in Montauk (516-668-5330), stands amid picturesque restored shops and docks. The restaurant specializes in seafood and the lobster is marvelous. A carte a la mode menu is $4 to $9. Reservations are not accepted except for large groups. The place is open daily from noon to 10 P.M. Weekends are exceptionally crowded, but Gosman's can seat 50. No credit cards are accepted. Another fine seafood place is the Lobster Inn, on Sunrise Highway, on the outskirts of Southampton (516-283-9828). Its the Hampton Bays area, the Tiana Bay Resort Motel and Marina (516-728-1488) has rooms right at the water's edge, plus a restaurant, a pool and facilities for water sports. In Westhampton Beach, there is the Port-O-Kai Motel, with its own marina, private ocean beach, pool and sun decks (516-288-4450). In Southampton, try the Village Motel, which is within walking distance of the beach and the fine shops on Job's Lane (516-283-3034). There are also the 92-room Southampton Inn (516-283-6500), which has its own restaurant and entertainment, and the Sandpiper Resort (516-283-1940), with cottages on the beach and swimming facilities. On East Hampton's Main Street, the Huntington Inn, founded in 1751, has an ambience that evokes Colonial times (516-324-0410). The East Hampton House (516-324-4300) has acres of landscaped grounds, two tennis courts, a pool, private sun decks and a coffee shop. In Montauk, there is Gurney's Inn (516-668-2345), which has 1,000 feet of private beach and a dining room overlooking the Atlantic. On Sag Harbor's quaint Main Street is Ted Conklin's American Hotel (516-725-3555), which has rooms with Victorian furniture and brass beds. In Amagansett, the charming Ocean Colony and Tennis Club (516-267-3130) has studio apartments, one- and two-bedroom cottages and, of course, tennis courts. Daily rates for a single room range from $25 for a single room to $90 for a double, with studios and other apartments going for considerably more.

YACHT CLUBS AND MARINAS—A substantial attraction of the Hamptons is water sports, fishing texts on its windows and walls (516-283-3015). Drive back toward Main Street to Meeting House Lane and the Southampton Historical Museum (516-283-2494) with exhibits on Long Island's origins, old whalers and the Revolutionary War. Open daily from 11 A.M. to 5 P.M. through Sept. 12. Admission is 75 cents for adults and 25 cents for children. While in Southampton, visit the Parrish Art Museum on Job's Lane (516-283-2118), founded in 1897. Its park has rare trees from around the world, and the museum, which has Greek and Roman statues, is open from 10 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. daily; no admission charge except for special exhibits. Drive on to Water Mill and stop by the 176-year-old windmill. Continue to Bridgehampton and go south on Ocean Road to Bridge Lane and the Eschiel Sanford House, built in 1689. Continue on to the Sagaponack General Store (516-337-0261), which is at least 100 years old and stocks Colonial-type candles and delicacies. Go back through Sag Harbor's restored Main Street, which has many antique stores, and stop at the Suffolk County Whaling Museum (516-725-0770). Whaling was once a prosperous business on Long Island, and the museum is open daily from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M., Sundays from 2 to 5 P.M. Admission is 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children. Back-track to Montauk Highway and then proceed to the village of East Hampton. Stop at the Old Hook Mill (516-324-4150), at 36 North Main Street, which was built in 1806 and still works. It is open daily from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M., Sundays from 2 to 5 P.M. Admission is 25 cents. Drive 2 1/2 past Amagansett to Montauk, dishes start at about $5. The location is beautiful, overlooking an inlet, but be prepared to wait as this place is almost always crowded. The Lobster Inn has a branch in East Hampton too (516-324-6044). In Southampton, Herb McCarthy's Bowden Square, North Sea Road (516-283-2800), offers American cuisine, including steaks and seafood, and has an excellent wine list. Prices from $4 up. At John Duck Jr.'s, on North Main Street (516-283-8111), the specialty, as the name suggests, is Long Island duck (about $4 and up for a la carte dishes). Reservations at both places are recommended.

THE CAPE EXPERIENCE—Many consider no Sunday morning in the Hamptons complete without breakfast or brunch at Fromm's on Main Street in Amagansett (516-267-3355). The atmosphere is almost Parisian and the eggs and pastries are good. Bobby Van's, on Montauk Highway in Bridgehampton (516-537-0590), is another leisurely establishment and a hangout for the literati who vacation in the Hamptons during the summer; it is to the Hamptons what Elaine's is to Manhattan. Author Willie Morris is around nearly all the time and is not one to shy away from a sparkling conversation. At either Fromm's or Bobby Van's, figure on at least $3 per person.

NIGHT LIFE—Martell's, on Main Street in Amagansett (516-267-6363), is a swinging singles bar. Also on Main Street is the Snogler's Cove (516-267-8149) where a guitarist performs several nights a week. In Sag Harbor, the Salty Dog on Noyac Road (516-725-0840) has discotheque music and a band. In addition to the area's cozy pubs and discotheques, there are always parties being given in the Hamptons—just comb through the bulletin boards at local stationery and candy stores for open invitations. Party crashing is a lot more acceptable in the Hamptons than it is in Manhattan.

BED AND BOARD—Accommodations are very tight during the summer, so reservations several weeks in advance are advisable. In and shark hunting. The following organizations rent boats, arrange deep sea fishing and other boat parties: Baron's Cove Marina in Sag Harbor (516-725-2100); East Hampton Marina (516-324-4042); Gosman Dock, Montauk (516-668-9837); Montauk Yacht Club and Inn, Star Island, Montauk (516-668-3100); Southampton Marina (516-283-5051). For further information, call the Westhampton Chamber of Commerce (516-288-3337).

THE SHINNECOCKS—The Shinnecock Indian tribe of about 300 persons lives on a lovely reservation just south of Montauk Highway, about five miles east of Hampton Bays. On the weekend of Sept. 4 and 5 they will hold their annual powwow, to which the Shinnecoeks invite tribes from all over the country. This is a colorful event; there is singing and dancing. Visitors pay a small admission fee.

AN AUTOMOBILE TOUR—The following trip can be done in a day or a weekend, or it can be spaced over several days. Start in Westhampton, at the C. and R. Duck Farm on Tamer's Lane, just south of Montauk Highway (516-288-2230). This is said to be the largest duck hatchery in the world and tours are available. Proceed to Quogue on Montauk Highway. On Quogue Street is the Schoolhouse Museum—the building dates to 1822—with early farm and household items. The museum is open through mid-September: Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 10 A.M. to 5 P.M.; Saturdays, 10 A.M. to noon. Admission is free. Nearby, on Old Country Road, is the 200-acre Quogue Wildlife Refuge (516-633-4771) with a remarkable nature trail. Proceed east along Route 27 to the Long Island Automotive Museum in Southampton (516-283-1880), which has over 100 antique cars, trucks and buses, some dating to 1869. The museum is open 9 A.M. to 5 P.M.; admission is $1.50 for adults and 50 cents for children. From Montauk Highway go south to First Neck Lane, then turn onto Dune Road, where St. Andrew's Dune Church stands almost at the edge of the sea. There are beautifully inscribed Biblical where on Main Street in the Atlantis Building is the Indian Museum, with exhibits on the life of the old Montauk Indians. The museum is open daily from 10 A.M. to 10 P.M. and admission is free. Then keep on to Montauk Point State Park, with its 1700 houses. The parking fee is $1.50 per car.

GUILD HALL—On East Hampton's Main Street is Guild Hall, the cultural center of the Hamptons, offering exhibits, theater, films, concerts and lectures. Its three galleries and sculpture garden (admission free) have in their permanent collections works by Willem de Kooning, Childe Hassam, Thomas Moran and James Peck. The Guild Hall's air-conditioned John Drew Theater, Long Island's best known and oldest summer theater, will present the following musicals this summer: "Fashion," by Anna Cora Mowatt, through Aug. 1; "The Catwren," based on a play by Mordcai Noah; Aug. 3-15; and "The Myth of America Smith," Aug. 17-26. Tickets run from $5 to $6.50 during the week and $6 to $7.50 on weekends. Telephone reservations accepted (516-324-4050).

SUMMER HAPPENINGS—Southampton College (516-283-4000) is offering a series of art seminars plus conferences on the environment; there are craft workshops Aug. 2 through 20. In East Hampton, the following events will be held: July 30, Ladies Village Improvement Society Fair in East Hampton; July 31, Montauk Village Association's greenery contest; cocktail party in Montauk; Aug. 12, fashion show and luncheon at Gurney's Inn in Montauk to benefit the Montauk Medical Group; Aug. 14, Fishermen's Fair in the Springs, East Hampton; Aug. 14, Ladies Village Improvement Society's Horse Show at the Topping Farm in Bridgehampton; Aug. 17, Guild Hall tour of artists' homes in the East Hampton area; Aug. 21 and 22, Lions Club Fair in Amagansett; Labor Day weekend, annual writers-artists softball game to benefit Head Start. For more information on these and other events contact Terri Trifari at the East Hampton Chamber of Commerce (516-324-0362).

Neither does Robert Redford. They want to keep it a secret, but they can't help raving about the town. Both Atlantic City and South Pass are just south of Wyoming's State Route 28 in one of the most historic regions of the West. This area served first as the rendezvous country for early fur trappers and mountain men and later as part of the Oregon Trail (a plaque commemorates the Whitman family, among the most famous early settlers). Still later it was famous for its gold-mining camps (today they're charming ghost towns). While making the rounds, catch the ambience of Atlantic City, with its saloon in the old mercantile building and the Buffalo Chips band playing "gold-rush type music" every other weekend. You can also hike through the surrounding hills and visit old abandoned mines. South Pass City is considered one of the better historic ghost town renovation jobs. While in the area, see if you can find Oregon Trail wagon tracks.

Wind River Canyon: Along U.S. 20 in Wyoming between Shoshoni and Thermopolis. Believe it or not, you're in the heart of feminist country. Nearby is the grave of Sacajawea, without whom Lewis and Clark might never have discovered what a bargain Thomas Jefferson got in the Louisiana Purchase. Furthermore, South Pass City was the home of Esther Morris, the first female justice of the peace and an early crusader for women's suffrage. Wind River Canyon itself is a splendidly rugged piece of real estate on the east end of the Wind River Indian reservation. At Thermopolis, you can take a refreshing dip in natural hot springs. (I preferred the state bath house, antiseptic though it was, to the commercial pools, which reminded me of faded resorts on the Jersey shore.)

Crow Indian Reservation and Custer (Little Big Horn) Battlefield: To reach these sites in south-central Montana, follow U.S. 87 and I-90 out of Billings to the town of Crow Agency and U.S. 212 to the battlefield. The pair mark one of the most remarkable juxtapositions in the West. The Crow were allies of Custer and enemies of the Sioux, who decimated Custer's troops exactly 100 years ago this year. The reservation is noteworthy for its annual Crow Fair, which this year will be held in the third week in August. Indians from hundreds of miles away gather in the grassy plains near Hardin and Crow Agency, set up teepees, campers and hot dog stands, and stage a gala parade on horseback. Young girls in family heirloom dresses and boys in beaded buckskin finery and feathers join in traditional tom-tom and modern Indian dance competitions. It's a wonderful spectacle, free of the raucous commercialism of better-known Indian celebrations and still largely bypassed by tourists. Right next door are the rolling wheat-colored hills and coulees of the Little Bighorn Battlefield. The self-guided trails ex-

Gallatin and Madison River Valleys and Virginia City: From Bozeman, Mont., loop south on U.S. 191 along the Gallatin River, skim the western edge of Yellowstone (see, you didn't miss it after all), then drive west and north on U.S. 287 past Quake Lake and along the Madison River through Ennis to Virginia City. This trip is a tour of Montana in miniature—the huge treeless prairie gradually giving way to the lush pine-fringed mountains of Beaverhead National Forest. I find Colorado's central Rockies somewhat barren, but Montana's Rockies are somehow warmer, greener, more friendly. The Gallatin and Madison Rivers are to trout fishermen what New York's Chrysler Building is to skyscraper freaks—the ultimate. Virginia City and Nevada City, just a mile down the road, are superbly restored ghost towns with a uniquely grizzly history. Virginia City was the home of the notorious Plummer gang of thieves that forced into being the west's most vigilant vigilante groups. A lot of people were hanged there, and the Bovey family, which is credited with making Virginia City, was the home of the has even salvaged the beams from which the rascals were suspended. "The Missouri Breaks" was filmed in Nevada City and outside Billings. Don't confuse this Virginia City with the one in Nevada, which is gaudy and jammed.

Sawtooth Wilderness and National Recreation Area: From Salmon, Idaho, drive southwest on U.S. 93 to Stanley, then south through the recreation area. Gary Smith, a ranger here for several years, describes the Sawtooths as "the same kind of spectacular mountains as the Tetons, except with more summits." Stanley, according to Ranger Smith, is the hearty, beery, modern cowboy town par excellence, complete with Saturday night brawls. Driving due south, you'll see the White Cloud range on the east, the Sawtooths on the West. Take a day's hike into the primitive region (no vehicles) by hopping a boat at Redfish Lake Lodge, which will ferry you across to hiking trails that meander through the woods back to the lodge. It's an easy drive south on U.S. 93 to Sun Valley, the country's classiest ski resort.

Flaming Gorge and Spirit Lake: On the Wyoming-Utah border, this spot is reached from Ogden, Utah, by driving east on Interstate 80 to Evanston, Wyo., and then south back into Utah on State Route 414. What makes this special is the combination of high plateau country, desert and the backdrop of the imposing High Uinta Mountains. Basque shepherders and their flocks populate the countryside. The Green River, below the dam, was a favorite hangout of the Butch Cassidy band. It's also a grand fishing area. This is the kind of place where athletic members of the family can go on backpacking and hiking expeditions while lazier

Dead Horse Point and Island in the Sky: West of U.S. 163 out of Moab, Utah. The drive to the great red rock canyon country of southern Utah is a long one. It is also worth every minute of it. There, deep in the high sandstone desert, is where the Colorado River has cut layer after layer of geologic history to create the most stunning scenery in the United States. Take either the paved road to Dead Horse Point, a Utah state park, or the dirt one to the even more isolated overlooks of the Island in the Sky section of Canyonlands National Park. Pull on a pair of sneakers to scramble on the slickrock. Take a Jeep tour even deeper into the wilds. Camp out. Spend enough time here so you'll begin to feel like a lizard, which is the way you should want to feel in a place like this. But don't get lost—the buzzards could find you before a ranger does. That's how isolated this area is.

Escalante Canyons: Drive south of Escalante, Utah, along Hole-in-the-Rock road (unpaved) and west along the road that runs south from Torrey to Boulder to Escalante. Once you get hooked on red rock canyons, you'll want to go everywhere. This is a hard place to get to. The finest parts are side canyons of the Escalante River (a tributary of the Colorado) that can only be reached by backpacking.

Maybe I shouldn't be mentioning this area at all. It is indescribably remote, beautiful, frightening and uplifting. You know—the kind of place that makes you start babbling poetry. Tiny rivulets with gnarled cedar and cottonwood trees growing along banks hemmed in by smooth narrow canyon walls dripping with the stuff called "desert varnish." (Actually iron oxide.) The first time I was in Escalante country a normally sane photographer from Chicago stood atop one of the cliffs facing an area called the Devil's Backbone, broke out into a byena-like laugh and started heaving rocks over the ledge. The second time, Sierra Clubbers made me swear I would not identify in print, ever, the exact side canyon we had explored. The most amazing thing is that except for a small portion within the Glen Canyon National Recreation Area, the Escalante Canyons are not a "designated" anything—national park, monument, historic site or state park.

Monument Valley: This site is reached by driving via State Road 163 north from Kayenta, Ariz., or 163 south from Mexican Hat, Utah. This is a different kind of red rock country and perhaps the most photographed after the Grand Canyon, yet lightly traveled because it's tucked away along the Utah-Arizona border on the Navajo Indian reservation far from the usual tourist routes. The setting for some of John Ford's most famous western movies, including "Stagecoach," "The Searchers" and "Cheyenne Autumn." Monument Valley is a wide open desert landscape punctuated with weird, eroded buttes, pinnacles, mesas, needles and other strangely compelling natural formations. From Gouldings Trading Post at the southwest end, you can take Jeep tours into the heart of the valley . . . and you'll swear that John Wayne is about to gallop around the next bend. Be especially careful if you're driving through the valley. Navajo families herd their sheep across its unpaved roads at the most unexpected times. Bring water. Bring movie memories. Monument Valley is better live than in Technicolor.

Canyon de Chelly: Follow the signs east from Chinle, Ariz. Deep inside the Navajo Nation, this national monument (pronounced Canyon du SHAY) epitomizes the wonders of the Southwest. You can ride on top of the rims and see weathered sandstone canyon walls sheltering a mostly dry riverbed along which Navajo families still tend their farms. Niches in the canyon protect the ruins of ancient Pueblo Indian dwellings—those of the Anasazi, or "ancient ones." The ruins are similar to, though not as extensive as, those in Colorado's Mesa Verde National Park. The region itself is rich in piñon-juniper woodlands and high enough to be cool at night even in the middle of summer.

Chaco Canyon: From Gallup, N.M., take I-40 to State Route 57 north and follow the signs. After Mesa Verde, this is the most important of the Anasazi remains. Amateur archeologists and anthropologists are inevitably intrigued by these ruins, because they have so much in common with modern-day tenements. The warring ruins linked together in lines that were several stories around A.D. 1000, and the monumental religious rooms called suggest that the earliest people the Southwest might have been most interesting of our Air forebears. The location of Chaco is not as scenic as the Mesa Verde, but because it's unpaved road in the middle where the ruins are much less eroded and more fun to poke around.

San Juan and Uncompahgre National Forests North of Durango, Colo. State Route 145 follows the Dolores River through the of the region. In my opinion, the loveliest part of the Co. Rockies and includes the state's beautiful mining town, Telluride. Dolores River is one of the other towns as a jump point for Jeep trips or backpack expeditions into the wilderness of local folks do this, too, but forests are big enough so you feel someone's right on your feet. There are hot springs at D crystal-clear mountain lakes meadows, waterfalls, and abandoned mines that some tors are still digging in. Tellinguride is handsome, with a thing Telluridians really worry is that their town might become popular. It will turn into a Aspen. Right now, it's a mini without crowds. The trip to Denver is a long eight-hour through the mountains. An a-tive is flying from Montrose (or a-half hours away by car) or Grand Junction (three hours away by car).

If You Go . . .

. . . in quest of the uncrowded West, check with local offices and ranger stations of the National Park Service and the National Forest Service for maps and brochures containing information on weather conditions, hiking trails, social activities and campgrounds in the specific areas of your interest. Here's a mileage chart covering the sites in the accompanying article in the order in which they are mentioned:

ENCOUNTER:

A Special Birthday Concert In Vienna

This is one of a series of occasional articles describing uncommon moments in travel—those encounters with the unexpected that are, for better or worse, the most memorable adventure of any journey.

ful as her native Austria, who took hours to choose a holiday hat at S. Klein's, no longer On the Square.

I thank her for making room, and we take some time to decide that my German and her English are both too tortured for this kind of an afternoon; French saves us. (French is to save me many times in the shops and restaurants of this city.)

Her name is Frau Hilde, and she can't wait until the music starts. "What waltz do I want today?" she says—and I wonder if this is wishful thinking on her part. Or are requests actually taken? A waitress in laced-up sandals takes our order, Frau Hilde's for coffee with schlag, mine for ices.

"The berry flavors are superb here," says Frau Hilde. "I'll have some too, then," I say. But the waitress dashes off.

"Anyhow, here's my treat for today—violets." From under the table, out of her shopping bag, Frau Hilde produces a small pot of flowers to decorate our table.

"They're a birthday present. I am 76 today," she says.

"They're a present from myself," she continues. "When there's nobody left to buy presents, one must take the responsibility on oneself."

"Will you let me treat you to a strawberry ice when the waitress comes back?" I ask.

"The coffee is enough," she says. When our order comes, Frau Hilde begins eating the schlag from the top of her coffee a small spoonful at a time. I think again of my mother, gone now two years. She would have been 73 in the spring, and hating every minute of it. The great burden of her life was having a Marlene Dietrich face and watching it age line by line.

When she lost her teeth in her late 60's from a gum infection, it hurt her almost like a loss of sight or hearing. She didn't enjoy being seen around anymore. The truth is, though I am no Dietrich, aging holds the same dread for me, too.

"I've been looking at your daughter," Frau Hilde says as the girls crawl under our table. "You have Wiener Blut, as we say—Viennese blood?"

"Yes. She has that porcelain-painted skin my mother had," I say. "It skipped a generation, unfortunately."

"Good looks are often more trouble than they are worth. I was a ballet dancer when I was young, during the First War. I was courted by many officers. I never married—struggled to be my own woman always. It's easier now, I can tell you."

"To go out and buy yourself violets—and come here. How I envy your being able to spend your birthday this way."

"Oh, the concerts," Frau Hilde says. "In the summer I come almost every day." She puts her finger to her lips to indicate that the tuning up will be over shortly. I look up from my ice to see the orchestra leader, black slicked-back hair and suit, standing over us.

"Which waltz do we begin with today?" he asks Frau Hilde.

"Let my American friend have the choice," she says.

I shake my head. "But it's your day."

"Then, please play 'Wiener Blut' for the lady and her little girl," Frau Hilde says.

The orchestra leader greets a few more of his regulars and goes back to the shell to strike up the waltz. I crane my neck to check my daughter and her friend, playing at the rear of the terrace.

Now I can settle in my seat and bask in what I came to Vienna for—color, music, gemütlichkeit. Also, there is the thought that maybe one of these birthdays soon I will start buying myself violets.

How the jet set turned a 7th century European city into the 8th wonder of the world. Dubrovnik.

Sophisticated Europeans have made this charming old city the new place to go. A white-washed playground set along the blues and greens of the Adriatic. Shaped by ancient fortifications, with a backdrop of craggy cliffs civilized by sculptured greenery and softened by dunes of sun-washed sand. In the distance, the soaring silhouettes of mountain peaks rising to dizzying heights above the red tiled roofs, then plunging headlong to the wave-curling floor of the sea.

sun and fun makes you thirsty, a bottle of fragrant Dalmatian wine runs about $1.50 in a local restaurant.

Now is the time to visit Dubrovnik. Who knows how long this fashionable new playground will keep its old-fashioned prices. Come and see. Before the cost is out of sight. Travel to Dubrovnik aboard Yugoslav Airline's fleet of Boeing jet aircraft. You get there faster, because you get there non-stop.

Want help in planning your Dubrovnik vacation? The answer is YUGOTOURS. They're Yugoslavia's leading tour operators. They're based in New York and their tour offerings are as diversified as their service is courteous and efficient. Simply fill out and mail the coupon below.

Here, the sun is king. And rain clouds rarely cast their grey shadows across the warm tracts of blue sky. Dubrovnik is a summer festival—all year round. There are swinging night clubs and quiet restaurants, charming museums and colorful galleries. Try your hand at bacarat in the elegant casino. Or your feet at dancing on the candle-lit terrace of a discotheque. The daytime sports program is equally impressive. Swing your racquet on a clay-floored court tucked in a fragrant pine grove. Or swing your skis against the curl of a gentle wave. Raise a sail amidst islands blessed by a steady breeze. Or lower yourself into the clear waters of the Adriatic—or your hotel swimming pool. And while Dubrovnik is a vacation paradise, her prices are still distinctly down-to-earth. There are 2500 fashionable deluxe and first-class hotel rooms at old-fashioned prices. The beautiful Babin Kuk Hotel offers a room, an American style breakfast and dinner (or lunch), plus a beautiful sea-view terrace to enjoy it on, for $13 to $24 (depending on the season) per person double occupancy. The bargains don't end with your bed and board. A taxi ride from Dubrovnik Airport to your hotel goes for only about $8. And a fine dinner will run between $5 and $8. A cruise to one of the picturesque islands about $14 including the picnic lunch. (Atlas Tours offers this and 16 other exciting boat and helicopter tours.) And if all the London, Paris, 15 days, $759.

You'll stay at the Royal Kensington in London and the Sofitel de Paris in Paris. And begin every morning with croissants and coffee. We'll start your sightseeing in London's Trafalgar Square and it'll continue right down the Champs Elysees in Paris. Also included in the price are air fares, transportation between airports and hotels, a copy of our "In London" shopping and nightclub guide, a casino and private club membership, free perfume in Paris, and the Pan Am's World Tour bonus features listed below. Ask for Pan Am's World Ambassador Tour, PAH 001.

London, Paris, Rome, Amsterdam, 15 days, $979.

A good introduction to Europe. You'll stay at the Royal Kensington in London, the Sofitel de Paris in Paris, the Marini Strand in Rome, and the Crest Hotel in Amsterdam. We'll start off your mornings with a continental breakfast, introduce you to each city and its sights with a half-day tour, and give you a copy of our "In London" shopping and nightclub guide to help you find bargains during the day and entertainment at night. That's not all, folks. The price also includes your air fare, transportation between airports and hotels, and all of the Pan Am's World Tour bonus features listed below. Ask for Pan Am's World Four Capitals Tour, PAH 001.

London, Paris, Rome, 15 days, $945.

These are the 3 most popular cities in Europe. It won't take long to find out why. Because we'll begin your visit to each with an escorted sight-seeing tour. Then you'll have plenty of time on your own to discover for yourself, say, Trafalgar Square, the Champs Elysees, or a sidewalk cafe on the Via Veneto. When you're not discovering, you'll be resting up in either the Royal Kensington in London, the Sofitel de Paris in Paris or the Marini Strand in Rome. Before you start out each day, you'll breakfast on croissants or biscuits and coffee at your hotel. If you're looking for bargains in London, you may find them with the help of our "In London" shopping and nightclub guide. Which, as the name implies, will also help you find entertainment. And London is teeming with nightclubs and casinos. The price also includes your air fare, transportation between airports and hotels, and all of the Pan Am's World Tour bonus features listed below. Ask for Pan Am's World Classic Tour, PAH 001.

Italy, 15 days, $1,156.

See Rome, Florence, Capri, Venice, Milan, Sorrento, Pompeii, Amalfi, Pisa, Siena, Padua, Verona, Lake Garda, and the Italian countryside. And mangia! On 11 continental breakfasts, 4 lunches, and 10 dinners. (Not at once but over the tour.) You'll also have first class and deluxe hotel accommodations, including the Grand Hotel Flora in Rome, on the Via Veneto. If that's not enough, we also include your air fare, transportation, in Italy by deluxe motor coach, and all of the Pan Am's World Tour bonus features listed below. Ask for Pan Am's World Marco Polo Tour, PAH 001.

BONUS FEATURES: All Pan Am's World Tours also include a Pan Am's World host in each city or tour escort throughout, our "Taste of London, Paris, Rome, and Amsterdam" dining discount plan, a copy of Pan Am's "Real Guide to Europe and the Mediterranean," a copy of Pan Am's World "Shopping in Europe," Berlitz guides to French and Italian, when visiting France or Italy, a 20% discount on car rentals through Pan Am's World Rent-a-Car System, discounts on Fotomat film and developing, tips to porters for 2 bags at airports and hotels, hotel service charges and taxes, a Pan Am's World flight bag, and more.

Tours are available on selected departure dates. Prices are based on round trip GIT economy air fare for groups of 10 or more. We help you join a group. If a group is not formed, we try to arrange an alternate date. Reservations and payment must be made at least 15 days before departure. Hotels are based on double occupancy. $3.00 U.S. departure tax is included. Prices are lower for departures in September and October.

Join The Queen for all—or part—of this unique experience.

On January 15, 1977, the Queen Elizabeth 2 embarks on what can only be described as an international event—a cruise around the world.

Twenty-one ports in eighty-one days. The Queen Elizabeth 2 follows a sun-filled warm-weather route across the seven seas to four continents and twenty-one ports from Rio to Cape Town, Bombay to Hong Kong. You cross the equator, pass the international date line and steam through the Panama Canal.

And all the while you'll be wined, dined and pampered as only Cunard knows how. Imagine, 3 crew members for every 4 passengers.

No other ship is so well suited to world cruising.

The Queen Elizabeth 2 is a born world traveler. Her gallant speed gets you to major ports quickly, so you can enjoy more time ashore. Her great size assures you of smooth sailing all the way. And her staterooms—the largest afloat—provide a maximum of comfort.

Be one of the few people to visit China.

By special arrangement between Cunard and the People's Republic of China, you can be one of the select number to enjoy a land excursion to this great country. Once there, you'll see the Chinese Opera, attend a banquet, see the famed Chinese acrobats, temples of antiquity, modern communes, and more.

Take only part of the cruise, still see China.

For the first time ever, Cunard has made it possible for a limited number of passengers to visit the People's Republic of China even if they are not taking the entire cruise. Choose from five special segments, all including China.

For instance, 39 days from Hong Kong to New York is $4,367 to $6,607 with air fare and land arrangements all taken care of by Thomas Cook. The full 81 days: $6,950 to $30,000. (Prices per person, double occupancy. The cost of the 3-day China excursion will be about $300.)

Opportunities like this are rare indeed. Reserve at once.

See your travel agent now for a free brochure. Or write Vaughn Rickard, Dept. A2, 555 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017. Then get set to sail. Depart from New York or Fort Lauderdale. Return to Los Angeles if you like. If you can bear the thought of coming back at all.

muda sun to the crisp air of Canada, you cruise the mighty St. Lawrence; visit the walled citadel of Quebec; sail the fiord setting of the Saguenay past Cape Eternity, reaching the gateway to Acadia National Park, at Bar Harbor, Maine.

Besides the scenic wonders and the enchanted islands, there's the enchantment of the ship. Each cruise aboard the fabled M.S. Kungsholm a never-to-be-forgotten experience to be treasured.

EUROPE

A rare chance to enjoy a 12-day Gulf cruise—with all the comforts of a round-the-world vessel.

There is something special about the elegance of a round-the-world vessel. You sense it on no other ship. There is an uncrowded vastness to its decks and lounges. A comfortable spaciousness to its limited number of cabins. A deft, nimble graciousness to its seasoned crew.

Most people who take short cruises rarely experience the exhilarating pleasure of such a vessel. But this fall you can sample it to the full. For 12 glorious days. Aboard the Royal Viking Sea.

Before leaving on her third round-the-world cruise in January, 1977, the Sea will take two 12-day Gulf/Caribbean cruises. Here is your chance to combine the convenience of a short cruise with the luxury of a long cruise. Even people who have sailed these waters a dozen times before will find the experience extraordinary.

It begins the moment you come aboard.

There are a mere 289 cabins, all First Class. 94% of all passengers enjoy sweeping, outside views. With fewer people aboard than ordinary short-cruise vessels, the 300-man crew has ample time to care for everyone.

The experience continues throughout the ship, thanks to a spaciousness that lets you live your days as actively or as quietly as you choose. There are deck games, and quiet out-of-the-way lounges. There is a swimming pool large enough for swimming, and decks quiet enough for dreaming. There is rousing evening entertainment, and deserted moonlit railings.

The dining room, set high on an upper deck, is large enough to serve everyone at a single, relaxed seating. This freedom to vary your pace to match your moods is the hallmark of luxurious, lengthy cruising. The Sea expresses it beautifully.

Along the way you will visit Playa del Carmen and Cozumel, Mexico. Georgetown, Grand Cayman, Montego Bay, Jamaica. And Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Ports carefully chosen to offer you a variety of shore amusements: beach-strolling, sight-seeing, shopping.

If you are thinking of taking a short cruise this fall, here is a marvelous opportunity to take it with long-cruise luxury. Aboard the round-the-world Royal Viking Sea. Of Norwegian registry. And spirit.

Each cruise offers a choice of embarkation ports. The first departs Fort Lauderdale November 16, and New Orleans November 19. The second departs Fort Lauderdale November 29, and New Orleans December 2.

For complete information—and reservations—see your travel agent. Or call us at 212-757-0921, collect.

The new Cunard Countess. Can any other ship offer as much?

Can you find a newer ship for your Caribbean cruise?

The Cunard Countess is the newest ship afloat. Being brand-new, she has features no other popularly priced cruise ship can match.

Like "suspended" decks to absorb vibration and insure quiet sailing. More and bigger public rooms including 4 bars, shopping arcade, a restaurant in the sky, and a nightclub with a marble dance floor! A vast expanse of open deck space with glamorous Lido/Pool area.

But the ultimate innovation is the stateroom design. Did we say stateroom? It's more like a "suite." Read on and see why.

When you return from breakfast, your bedroom is gone. In its place, you'll find a living room.

A miracle? No. Just an ingenious design that allows the beds to slip out of sight and fully upholstered sofas to take their place. Now you're ready to entertain friends.

Later on in the evening when you return from the movies, or from our glass-enclosed casino or from one of our 3 nightclubs, you'll find your living room is a bedroom again.

If you like the idea of living in a "suite," sail the Cunard Countess.

Can you find a 7-day itinerary that offers more ports including South America?

What would a new ship be without a great itinerary? The Cunard Countess has the best. You'll visit six "countries" in seven days; even another continent.

You'll go all the way to South America with stops at Caracas (La Guaira), Venezuela; Grenada; Barbados; St. Lucia; St. Thomas; and San Juan. Go as far in the Caribbean as you can go. In fact, you'll see more of the Caribbean in a week than most people get to see in a lifetime.

No other one-week cruise ship offers more.

Can you find so much value for your dollar?

Cunard Countess gives you more for your money than any other cruise ship in her class. Seventy percent of her staterooms are outside—and every one is better priced than comparable rooms on competitive ships. Even her minimum-priced rooms are a special value.

All have wall-to-wall carpeting, private bathroom, radio and telephone. Plus you get the best itinerary in the Caribbean and service in the 136-year Cunard tradition.

The Cunard Countess leaves from San Juan every Saturday starting with an inaugural voyage on August 14th. See your travel agent or call Cunard at (212) 983-2510. Rates include round-trip air fare direct from New York, four superb meals daily, all entertainment on board, port taxes and transfers between San Juan airport and the ship. All for only $555-$920 complete from New York

Two weeks to spare?

Get off the ship and spend a week at Cunard's Hotel La Toc on St. Lucia or at our Paradise Beach Hotel on Barbados. The Cunard Countess will pick you up on her way home one week later. The complete 2-week fly/cruise/resort package is $770-$1010*. (Meals extra at resort.)

*Via Overseas National Airways, a U.S.-certificated supplemental air carrier; travel arranged by GWV Travel Inc. Rates per person, double occupancy.
